Ways Of Life In Canada Move To One Pattern

By STEWART MacLEOD

OTTAWA (CP)—The various ways of life in Canada appear to be converging toward a single pattern, says a Montreal sociologist. The ways of English- and French - speaking families are easing together, rural and urban living is no longer so different, and life in one part of Canada is getting similar to life in another.

These were preliminary views of Frederic Elkin, associate professor of sociology at the University of Montreal, who produced a 70,000-word summary of the existing information available on family life in Canada.

The summary, to be published in book form, will be a working document at the Canadian Conference on the Family, called by Conservative — General and Mme. Vanier for June in Ottawa.

Professor Elkin told a press conference Tuesday he reached two main conclusions in his writings: There should be a national clearing house for family studies, so the many scattered studies and research projects could be brought together and co-ordinated, and a Canadian research advisory centre of the family should be established to assist in turning out more new information.

CITES GAPS

He said there were far too many gaps in existing information for anyone to reach firm conclusions on over-all family life in Canada. No one had made a study of divorce and its effects, or the effects of having retarded children in a family, or delinquency, or the broad field of incompatability.

But his seven-month study—he was assisted by four students last summer—did indicate some noticeable changes in Canada.

In Quebec, family life has tended to veer away from the traditional way that was closely bound to the communities and church. There was an increasing awareness of education with the result that young people had to break away from family units for higher education. Families now were smaller in Quebec—about an average of 4.5 members—although still somewhat higher than the Canadian average of 3.9. Wives now got more acknowledgement for their role in the family.

"In many respects French- and English-speaking families seem to be moving closer together."

With a changing way of life, there was also a changing way of spending money. Professor Elkin said that 50 years ago Canadian spent 90 per cent of their family incomes on food, clothing and shelter. Today the figure is about 68 per cent.

The work by Professor Elkin was the first project of its kind ever undertaken in Canada.

LIBERAL

make the legal age 12 or 13." He said "why not leave it at 21, then you would have no loophole." The section was changed to make the age limit 21.

Mr. Matheson pointed out that one of the requirements a person must have before he can be issued a license is that he must be of good character and reputation. "How do you define that?" he asked.

He also pointed out that a dining room license can only be issued to a hotel and asked "what will the regulations be on this?"

Mr. Farmer said licenses will only go to a "high class type of hotel."

HIGH COST DRINKS

"I'm going to read you something," said Mr. Matheson, holding up a menu of alcoholic beverages which he said was from Ontario.

"A one and a quarter ounce drink of rum sells for $1.25. There are about 20 such drinks in a bottle that can be purchased through a liquor commission for about $6. Sold as individual drinks, the bottle will bring in a profit of about $25, including tips.

"Who is going to pay this high cost. $30 a bottle is more than some people in this province make in a week. Who can afford these prices. This is class legislation. You're encouraging bootleggers."

Mr. Matheson said that some sections of the Act were contradictory. "It all boils down," he said, "to a badly drafted, mutilated act. You'll be the laughing stock when you get to the courts."

Before reading of the amendments began, Mr. Matheson echoing his own sentiments of the previous sitting, said that the new legislation was inadequate.

"I maintain there should be a complete new act," he said. "I don't think you can change an act made in 1957 . . . and make a good job of it."

Mr. Farmer replied that "the matter was precipitated by a court decision", adding that the government would like to bring in a complete act but that it would require "a lot of draughtsmanship".

Mr. Matheson suggested that possibly the clubs should be closed for a year until such legislation could be made. He said the new amendments were liable to be "a laughingstock in the courts."

1ST KINGS LIBERAL

First Kings Liberal Daniel MacDonald, speaking briefly on the new amendments, said he had been pleased at the premier's words the day before, when he had said the amendments would not mean an increase in the number of liquor outlets.

He said, however, that "prohibition is not a good thing" and that "people that desire a drink and can handle a drink should get it."

Mr. MacDonald noted that "in the 'old country' where people have access to liquor . . . you don't meet them sashaying all over the street".

Mr. MacDonald said that although he would "not like to put liquor where it would tempt youth" that the youth of the Island are often 'expected' to other provinces where liquor legislation is more open than it is on P.E.I. and that they should learn to live with it.

"I'm not advocating a vocational school to teach people how to drink," he said, but added that under proper legislation "instead of liquor handling them, they would handle liquor."

"DUPLESSIS LEGISLATION"

During the reading of the amendment, Mr. Matheson said that sections referring to the Commission indicated the work of "a dictatorship of first degree," and called it "another Duplessis legislation".

Mr. Farmer had indicated the power behind the law was the government, rather than the Commission which was supposed to administer it.

Mr. Matheson said this made the Commission "just a rubber stamp" for the government, and that its authority to borrow up to $2 million was "another blank cheque for the government".

He moved that the figure $2 million be changed to $100, but the motion was defeated by a vote following party lines.

Mr. Matheson also indicated that the Commission's power to refuse to grant liquor-selling licences "at its discretion" meant that such licences would be granted "only to friends of the government and the fellow with enough cash."

"That isn't so at all," Mr. Farmer replied. "As you know, the government has a definite policy. We can't let the Commission run counter to the policy of the government."

He said the Commission's duty was to carry out government policies. "That's the way it is done in all places," he added.

The bill was agreed to, with the final vote split along party lines.

The legislation states that on May 31 all existing special permits for the purchase and sale of liquor will expire.

FOUR TYPES LICENSES

Four new kinds of license will be available. They are club license, dining room license, military canteen license and lounge license.

A club license will only be issued to a club that has a clearly defined basis of membership and reasons for existence other than selling alcoholic beverages. Also the club must have regular hours of operation, regular inspection by qualified authorities and must not sell liquor to anyone under 21 or to the general public.

A dining room license can only be issued to a hotel that meets certain regulations and a lounge license can only be issued to the holder of a dining room license.
