U.S. Bank Take-Over Talk Sparks Concern In Canada

By KEN SMITH
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Rumors of a possible United States take-over of one of Canada's proposed new chartered banks ran into quick and apparently determined rejections on all sides last week, but the nervousness engendered by the suggestion remains.

Ever since the First National City Bank of New York acquired control of the Mercantile Bank of Canada, banking sources have expressed concern about possible further penetration from expansion - minded American banks.

There are two basic areas of this concern: competitive pressures and potential information leaks.

Some sources say large subsidiaries of American will be encouraged to shift their business from other Canadian banks to the Mercantile, keeping everything in the family, as it were.

There has been no indication, however, that such a trend is developing.

One U.S. business source said that quite apart from the fact Canadian banks are perfectly capable of meeting and dealing with any competition from anywhere, no U.S. parent company would want the impression given out that it is pressuring its subsidiary.

Especially, he added, under present circumstances and feeling.

The concern about information arises out of the regular briefings Canada's chartered banks are given on matters of fiscal policy. There now is no way, sources say, of preventing this confidential information being passed on to the parent U.S. bank.

Arguing against this, however, the U.S. source pointed out that Mercantile was controlled by a Dutch bank before National City acquired it—and no problem arose then and no fears were expressed.

Elsewhere on the business scene, Canadian Breweries Ltd. reported a technological breakthrough that has eluded major brewers around the world for years.

The 95-per-cent Canadian-owned brewery said it has succeeded in developing a technique permitting continuous brewing, instead of making beer by the batch.

YEARS OF RESEARCH

The technique, perfected after years of research including a three-year pilot test period at Cleveland, will be used first in Canadian Breweries new $10,000,000 plant at Dallas, Tex.

It is, the company says, the first basic change in production methods in the industry in hundreds of years.

"Anyone could have developed the equipment through which this beer is made," Ian R. Dowie, Canadian Breweries president, said. "The problem was to develop it and learn to use it in such a way that beer made in this way was identical with the beer made by the old batch method—and this is what we have done."

The wool industry announced that a world-wide drive will be started to win recognition for a special symbol of quality that will be attached to all woollen goods.

The symbol, designed to give woollen products a quality identity throughout the world, will be controlled by the International Wool Secretariat and its partners in various countries and will be protected by law.

It will be introduced this year in the United States, Britain, Japan, France, Holland, Germany and Belgium. In 1965, it will be introduced into 20 other countries, including Canada.

Its use will be limited to manufacturers whose products meet specified requirements for pure virgin wool fibre content.

A-11 Flies Reconnaissance Over Communist Territory

WASHINGTON. (AP) — An aviation trade journal says the A-11, the secret U.S. supersonic jet plane whose existence President Johnson disclosed eight days ago, "has already flown long-range reconnaissance missions over Communist territory."

A high government official familiar with the A-11 said, however, "the A-11 has not flown any reconnaissance missions over Communist territory."

Aviation Week and Space Technology, in its edition released today, says of A-11:

"The Lockheed A-11 is a mach 3.5 special-purpose aircraft that has already flown long-range reconnaissance missions over Communist territory.

"During the operations over the last two years it has proved its ability to out-fly any air defence system now in operational use."

The trade journal says in an accompanying editorial that the jet is not a fight-interceptor aircraft.

The article says the plane has hit top speeds of 2,300 miles an hour and is the first military plane in the world to sustain a speed of about 2,000 miles an hour.

The story says the A-11 has attained a speed of about 1,900 miles an hour up to 100,000 feet in altitude, although its maximum speed was reached at slightly above 70,000 feet.

President Johnson, in announcing the A-11 at his Feb. 29 press conference, called it an experimental aircraft which was undergoing tests to determine its capability as a long-range interceptor.

Defence Secretary Robert S. McNamara also said "the A-11 is an interceptor aircraft, it is being developed as such, and beyond that I have nothing further to say on its use."

Aviation Week's story says Lockheed California Company won a design competition for the A-11 as successor to the high-flying U-2 reconnaissance plane, built by the same firm.

The downing of U-2 pilot Francis Gary Powers in Russiaa in My 1960 revealed that the U.S. had been sending the U-2 on spying missions for four years.

Hope Voiced CBC To Stop Separatist Aid

RENFREW, Ont. (CP)—Yvon Dupuis, outspoken federal minister without portfolio, said here he hpoes the CBC will "end its ways and stop helping the separatist cause."

He found it "revolting" that the publicly owned broadcasting system, created in 1932 to promote national unity, now was featuring talks by a small band of separatists and extremists.

"The CBC was founded to unite the country, not to divide it," he told a dinner meeting of the Renfrew South Liberal Association.

The great majority of French-Canadians were strongly opposed to separatism, but separatist leader Marcel Chaput and other "extremists" had free access to CBC news and comment programs, while elected representatives of the people were ignored.

Mr. Dupuis also accused the press of giving too much publicity to separatists and acts of terrorism in Quebec. "Unfortunately the better things of life don't make headlines."

He appealed to all news media to help Canadians know more about each other.

Freak Explosion Kills 3 Marines

TWENTYNINE PALMS, Calif. (AP)—A freak explosion of old ammunition, long buried under desert sand drifts, killed three marines and critically injured two others Saturday, a Twenty-nine Palms Marine Base spokesman said here.

About 20,000 marines were engaged in air - ground manoeuvres when the explosion occurred in the central portion of the 995-square-mile base on the Mojave Desert.

The spokesman said the area has been used as an artillery and aerial bombing range since the early days of the Second World War.

Opening lead—king of clubs.

Nobody rings a bell to tell you when the crucial point in the play of a hand has been reached. You have to recognize such situations when they arise, because, if you don't, a golden opportunity can pass you by and an irate partner may indelicately point an accusing finger at you.

For example, take this hand where West is defending against four spades. He cashes three top clubs, East following once and then discarding a low heart and a low diamond on the next two clubs.

What should West play now? There is only one correct play for him to make—another club. This enables East to ruff with the jack, forcing South to lose a trump trick and go down one. Not many players would have the presence of mind to play another club, but it is obviously the killing line of defense.

What should induce West to play the fourth round of clubs? It runs counter to instinct, no doubt, since it has been drummed into all of us that it is bad defensive play to provide declarer with a ruff and discard.

But this general rule, though usually a good one to follow, is bound to have its exceptions, just as any other general rule has. A player is supposed to govern the rule and not let the rule govern him. If following a rule in a particular case, seems harmful, the rule should be abandoned in that case.

West should realize, at trick four, that there is no real hope of defeating the contract unless a trump trick can be won. He has a certainty of making a trump trick for his side if his partner has the jack, queen or king of spades.

He therefore leads the ten of clubs and hopes that East will produce one of these cards. If it turns out that East has none of them, West can at least claim A for effort.
