Communist Leadership Is Afflicted By Old Age

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
Associated Press Staff Writer

World communist leadership today is suffering from hardening of the arteries.

The Communist wall dividing Berlin is symptomatic of one of the world movements' basic ailments. Leaders of communism, often prisoners of 19th century conceptions, have constructed walls against 20th century political and social ideas.

The average age of the top leaders in the Chinese Communist hierarchy is 67, the oldest regime in terms of the age of any Communist nation.

The West has its share of older men in top leadership. President de Gaulle of France is 74; Chancellor Erhard of West Germany, 67; Prime Minister Douglas-Home, 61. But there is a big difference.

Western presidents and prime ministers are not frozen into the leadership of their nations. Their parties and their nations have not been continuously in control.

Today, 14 countries in the world are ruled by Communist parties. The oldest ruler, Ho Chi Minh of North Viet Nam, is 74. The youngest is 39-year-old Fidel Castro of Cuba whose youth and unmanageability are a problem to his patrons abroad.

AVERAGE 63 YEARS

If one excludes Castro and 48-year-old Umzhagin Tsedenbal of Outer Mongolia—for all practical purposes part of the Soviet Union—the average age of the leaders in the other 12 Communist countries is 63.

Premier Khrushchev, 70, has been hear the top of the hierarchy for more than 25 years. His prospective successor, Leonid Brezhnev, is relatively young at 57.

Chairman Mao Tse-tung of the Chinese Communist party is 70. He has controlled the party since the mid-1930s.

His prospective successor, Lui Shao-chih, a sort of high priest of Communist scriptures, is 66.

Wladyslaw Gomulka of Poland is 59; Tito of Yugoslavia, 72; the dogma - ridden Walter Ulbricht of East Germany, 71; Gheorghiu-Dej of Romania, 62. The youngest Communist boss in central Europe is Janos Kadar of Hungary, 52.

EAGER FOR CHANGE

Even in Cuba, much of the party is old. Blas Roca, who is Moscow's man in Havana, is 55, and has had innumerable headaches trying to keep his "old" Communists from being swept entirely out of the picture by Castro's impatient "new" Communists, eager to spread the revolution across Latin America.

In the non-Communist world, the Communist party leadership is growing old. Elderly warhorses have been in the saddle for years. Italy's Palmiro Togliatti is 71. Waldeck Rochet of France is 59. West Germany's Max Reimann is about 60. Luis Carlos Prestes, veteran of Communist turbulence in Brazil is 66. In Japan, the present party chairman, pro - Chinese Sanzo Nosaka, is 70. Secretary-General Kenji Miyamoto is 57.

For the most part, top Communist bosses both in Red-ruled countries and elsewhere are products of communism's first revolutionary wave 40 years ago, when they were young, impatient and spoiling for power.

Once in control, they could be rooted out only by violence or the inexorability of nature.

DOGMA OUTDATED

Dogma created by mid-19th century prophets ruled the parties. In the interests of revolutionary discipline, rigid doctrine may have served its purpose, but in the mid-20th century outdated notions became economic and social liabilities.

In the U.S.S.R., Yugoslavia and other European Communist countries, long years of power diluted fervor for change.

In China, a group of men ranging in age from 60 to 78 rule by antiquated dogma mixed with old Chinese habits of collectivism.

China's present - day leaders, few of whom ever have been outside their homeland, are remnants of a once-militant party, hard core of 50,000 which was the target of Chiang Kai-shek's all-out war on the Communists launched in 1927. Only a handful of them — perhaps 200—remain today. These elderly leaders make up the top Chinese party and government bodies.

Young men coming up behind them are reared in the rigid structures which erect walls against contamination by any social or political ideas from the outside.

The Soviet Union for some years now, there has been an obvious and sharpening clash between the older and younger generations. A younger Soviet party is emerging, made up of ambitious people bearing little resemblance to the Bolsheviks of old.

ENJOY PRIVILEGES

Members of the Soviet party now include the specialists, the technocrats, the professional people. There are able people both in the ranks and outside the party.

These Soviet people now represent a privileged class, a ruling class. As a result, a sort of stratification of classes seems to be setting in. The other class is made up of workers, farmers and lower rank people who do not share in privileges that come from membership in or favors from the Communist party.

The ageing of bolshevism, which was Soviet communism in its pristine form, has provoked serious problems for Moscow with regard to its claim to lead the world movement.

The validity of the claim was weakened in 1953 with the death of Stalin. There was no leader of Stalin's stature to take his place. The relaxations, politically necessary after he died, watered down communism inside the U.S.S.R. and made the Kremlin look less awesome to Communists around the world. It became easier to resist and defy.

Within the Soviet Union, the younger generation balked at what it obviously regarded as the narrow-mindedness of leaders brought up in the Stalinist strait jacket. They did not seek violent revolution but social evolution and continuing change.

But the old leaders such as Premier Khrushchev seem to insist that all which remains to be done now is to "build communism." This implies slow plodding toward a distant, misty goal.

The Khrushchev idea is not enough for the young people, no longer easy targets for the old cliches and the tired promises.

Outside the Communist blocnations, the movement is dogged by confusion. While old men rule the Chinese party, their bid for Communist expansion is made to younger countries and younger elements abroad, to what they call the "national liberation movement." If there is danger in this, the Chinese still are a have-not nation, without much to lose by gambling.

But to older generation communists in the U.S.S.R.—with much to lose in gambling with the possibility of war—and to established Communists in advanced countries, things are different. It's all right with them, now, to avoid the sort of risks they would eagerly have taken a generation ago, and to avoid open revolutionary warfare while working for parliamentary change.

It's more comfortable that way for the older men.

Canadians Get Reinforcements For Cyprus Force

By PETER BUCKLEY

NICOSIA (CP)—A 21-man detachment of the Royal 22nd Regiment with four jeep-mounted, 106 - mm recoilless rifles arrived at Nicosia Airport Friday to strengthen the Canadian contingent with the United Nations peace force in Cyprus.

The mounted weapons were described as the most powerful now in possession of the UN peace-keeping force here.

The reinforcements arrived aboard the regular weekly flight of an RCAF Yukon transport. Ammunition for guns and other supplies came in on an RCAF Hercules.

Canadian officers said the new weapons were brought here on a request from the UN command at the beginning of August, and not as a result of the current crisis on the island.

The recoilless rifles are designed as anti-tank weapons but have ammunition for use in various other tasks. Before their arrival, the heaviest armament in the UN force was heavy machineguns and mortars.

The arrival of 21 new troops raises the strength of the Canadian contingent in Cyprus to 1,126.

BRIEFLY FORGETFUL

CONTRACT BRIDGE

By B. JAY BECKER

FAMOUS HANDS

Double-dummy problem. The contract is Six Spades and West leads the king of hearts. South to make twelve tricks against any defense.

This hand was composed by Giordano Nattucci and was originally published in Bridge d'Italia. It is a double-dummy problem, which means that you are entitled to look at all four hands in attempting to make six spades, taking full advantage of seeing the 52 cards.

Like most double-dummy problems, the setting is somewhat unreal, particularly the heart lead in this case, but players who enjoy solving problems of this type will find the solution a mild challenge at least.

If you would like to work the hand out for yourself, stop reading right here.

This is the solution. Declarer ruffs the heart lead in dummy with the three and underruffs with the deuce. He then leads the four of spades, winning East's seven with the nine. After cashing the A-K of diamonds he plays the ace and a low club, forcing West to win the trick.

West is compelled to return a heart, permitting declarer to ruff in dummy with the six, which South is careful to underruff with the five.

Dummy by this time has five good diamonds and a club. Declarer has the A-K-J of spades and three good clubs, while East has the Q-10-8 of spades, two hearts and a club.

Declarer now starts to run the diamonds, planning to discard his clubs if East does not ruff. Eventually he traps East's trumps as a result of having deliberately shortened himself in trumps. If East ruffs at any point as the diamonds are led, declarer overruffs, draws trumps, and makes the rest of the tricks with ease.

There is no defense to the trump coup provided South underruffs dummy both times that West leads a heart. It does West no good to discard one of his high clubs at trick two because declarer can still put him in the lead with a club, after cashing the A-K of diamonds. This line of defense merely postpones the agony for East.
