ELLEN'S DIARY

Sun's Jewelled Fingers Are Touching The Fields

Did you rise early this morning, perhaps because of some sudden and untimely awaking? You had fancied you heard the clock ring its warning alarm? Or maybe you "just happened to wake n," and at once bethought yourself of some piece of baking ahead, which it would be as well "to get out of the way" before the heat of the day? Or did you rise as do we sometimes to enjoy, by yourself, the charm of a lovely summer morning? Though we know we shall have still and beautiful dawns in the seasons to come, they will not break over the green and flowering countryside of now.

So if on a farm you rise early, you come to the hush and peace of the day while the household still rests. You move silently, lest you should chance to disturb those upon whose shoulders the affairs of the farming depend. Their day will begin presently. It will be lengthy. And if not actually so toilsome as once in the haying, it will still be wearysome, we know. You come to the door or verandah. You are alone — the only human in your world about. Now the sun's rays are touching the fields with jewelled fingers, catching brightly the dewshine, gilding the shoulders of the hills through the hazy veil of the morning. So clean and refreshing, the air is. The fragrance you note is from the blossoming linden down on a corner of the lawn, or some other flowering near...

How delightful the view is! You think of those scouts of old who came to look out on the promised land. They only glimpsed briefly its loveliness. This land is yours. It belongs to the family. The fields yield its livelihood. The sweat of every acre is familiar and dear. But now the fields where yesterday the folks made hay are deserted. Presently, however, when the sun lifts the night's dew, and the wind commences to stir the breathless leaves and grasses, the men and machines will return to them. There will come the bustle of work. But how altogether quiet and serene it is now!

Afar on a slope, odd younglings of the cattle-kind graze. In the near pasture, cows that have been resting, leave, one by one beds outlined in the dewfall. A sow emerges from a pen in the piggery to enjoy a clovery bite in the paddock. A lambkin rises from his nap to join the ewe-mother already on foot. It is breakfast - time there!

A robin filed toward the garden to sample the ripe cherries. A swallow swoops low, scolding Tabby and the pair of kittens, she leads toward the door. Scampie comes around a corner, a hungry expression in his eyes. There is a stirring now at the stables - cows are being let in to their stalls. Our stairfoot - door, opens ... closes.

"Have I over - slept, Ellen?" James calls... And, having looked out and loved the fresh new of the morning, we come in to the round of our day.

"Say the name again" Peter requested, when rambling in the sunset with the pair as far as the end of the old mill - road, they had chanced to find sweet treasure along the way.

"Raspberries" Alex said.

"Raspberries? Oh, I didn't know" he smiled.

"I guess" Alex offered over his head, face sober, "the summer will soon go now. It does, once the raspberries are ripe!"

Our day is about gone. It gave our farmers nice returns in stored bales for their 'hire.'"

Until tomorrow — Diary — Good - night.....

MARY HAWORTH

Reader Offers Counsel Suggestive Of Escapism

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: You weren't very constructive, I thought, in response to the woman who works at an office job she hates, to supplement her husband's income.

Granted that she did show basic psychological frustrations, which could lead her to feel bored in any situation, still the fact remains that routine office work with few exceptions can be soul-destroying.

May I suggest the following job-possibilities, as better paid than office work, while also offering more variety: market research, demonstrating products or machinery, telephone selling or door-to-door selling full or part-time.

Just today, for example, in our suburban paper there is an advertisement for a sales person, house-to-house or telephone, to sell music lessons!

Finding the right job can be very difficult, but well worth the effort. This woman might do dressmaking or upholstery: both potentially very profitable. Sincerely, D.S.

Dear D.S.: It would be interesting to hear LL's opinion as to which list of recommendations, yours or mine, offers the more feasible pathway out of her defeatist self-pity.

You've completely overlooked (or chosen to bypass) the principal points she makes, in trying to define her problem as she sees it. First of all, she says she dislikes the work she does but "isn't qualified for any other." Also she says "I don't know how to do anything else" (job-wise).

She further underscores her limited employability by adding "There are other jobs I could try, but they don't pay enough to be worthwhile, if I am to help out at home financially."

Tardy, and primarily, she wants "just to stay home." Or, if God won't grant that, "to become so adjusted to the office job" that she "won't mind doing it."

Whereupon you produce the tangential suggestion that she experiment with fringe-type employment, handled mostly by transients, who are here today and gone tomorrow (as the phrase is), because the wage returns (if and when) are sporadic, uneven and unpredictable.

If you are counselling her in anything, it is escapism, not the adult business of facing up to her fundamental problem and mastering it.

LL's problem is a problem, essentially, of aversion to the disciplines of duty as indicated by her circumstances.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I would be grateful if you would reprint the list of books outlined in an earlier article in which you discussed the matter of revitalizing a man's contribution to marriage after extensive philandering on his part.

I am a formerly wayward husband, determined to remedy some of my past mistakes, if possible. Sincerely, E.F.

DEAR E.F.: I don't recall having prescribed a reading list as a specific remedy for a philandering bias, or as a means of helping a reprobate husband reform his ways and restore his marriage.

However, from time to time I have mentioned the following books, which might be applicable to your hopes and needs:

Dr. Edmund Bergler's "Revolt of the Middle-Aged Man" (Wyn publishers) which provides a good deal of sardonic insight into the compulsive reasons why husbands go astray, unprofitably.

Dom Aelred Watkin's "The Enemies of Love" (Kenedy, publishers), which calls attention to the flaws in ourselves that undermine love, and tells us how to rise above them.

Winefield Hope's "Life Together" (Sheed and Ward) which speaks especially to the man and wife whose deepest interest in life is to keep their marriage a fine, joyous, ennobling relationship.

Also, I may add, a learned friend of mine, who teaches premarriage (or marriage preparatory) courses in a large and famous mid-western college, thinks very highly of Eric Fromm's "The Art of Loving" (Harpers) as a handbook for marriage.

I too have read and recommended this book, but that was before I came across Watkin's book in similar vein, cited above which seems actually to quicken the spirit while informing the mind of the truth seeker. M.H

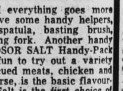
MONTREAL, August 6th—Why turn your back on Opportunity? . . . especially when it's a chance to buy a great bargain for cash. For instance, if opportunity presents itself in a gleaming, just slightly used car at hundreds of dollars off the original selling price, don't let the cash outlay stop you. Just remember the ever-popular BANK OF MONTREAL Family Finance Plan. For here is a low-cost, life-insured plan that can be arranged to suit almost any income as long as you can make monthly payments without hardship. So take advantage of Opportunity when it next comes a-knocking through this B of M Family Finance Plan at your neighbourhood branch of "My Bank".

GETTING TO KNOW someone who 'knows' can make life much pleasanter. You consult a doctor, a dentist, or an electrician for advice in their specialties . . . but the 'specialist' who can make the biggest difference in your daily life is the man behind the meat counter at your nearest DOMINION STORE. Get to know him! He can give you expert help in meat-buying. He'll soon get to know how large a roast you need for your family . . . how thick your husband likes his steaks cut . . . all your likes and dislikes. Only Dominion gives you the convenience of supermarket shopping . . . . plus personal, 'specialized' service!



IT'S COOKOUT TIME! And you'll find everything goes more smoothly if you have some handy helpers, like long-handled spatula, basting brush, and multiple toasting fork. Another handy helper is the WINDSOR SALT Handy-Pack of 3 shakers. It's fun to try out a variety of spices for barbecued meats, chicken and fish, but salt, of course, is the basic flavouring. And Windsor Salt is the first choice of homemakers. It's crystal-pure, and free-running. For barbecues and picnics, get the Windsor Handy-Pack of 3 shakers.

OH, THE BLISS OF A PEST-FREE SUMMER! And it's yours with FLY-TOX House & Garden Spray. Just the press of a button keeps your home free of pesky insects—another press on the same button clears your garden of aphids and other garden pests. One spray does the double job, when it's FLY-TOX House & Garden. And now for a really effective way of ridding yourself of ants, set TAT ANT TRAPS. Scout ants carry poison back to nest—entire colonies are wiped out! Banishes both sweet and grease-eating ants from your home.
