British Want More Than Statue As President Kennedy Memorial

By CAROL KENNEDY

LONDON (CP)—One dominant theme is emerging from public reaction here to a proposed national memorial to President Kennedy—that in some way it should actively symbolize and promote the causes for which he stood.

Besides a conventional statue or monument, it is felt, there should be some kind of institution to carry on the late president's unfinished work for peace, racial tolerance and international understanding.

Among favored suggestions are scholarships for colored students; an education - for - peace movement penetrating to underdeveloped countries similar to the Kennedy - inspired Peace Corps; institutes for the mentally handicapped and a new British university.

Without waiting for the form of the government memorial to be decided, private fund-raising is surging ahead on spontaneous projects.

KENNEDY SCHOLARSHIP

Undergraduates at Cambridge University have launched a nationwide drive to raise £25,000 for a John F. Kennedy scholarship that would send a British student to Harvard University each year to study international affairs. Harvard was Kennedy's alma mater.

A student spokesman said the aim would be "to educate leaders for tomorrow—leaders with the qualities of President Kennedy."

Another idea being canvassed is for a Kennedy Institute to educate mentally deficient children—a project to which the Kennedy Foundation in the U.S. is devoted.

The Guild of Teachers of Backward Children has announced that if the government does not accept this idea as part of the national project it will raise funds itself for an institute.

The weekly New Statesman, acclaiming the idea as "imaginative and practical," says a contribution of three pence from every schoolchild in Britain would provide half the £200,000 minimum needed.

The suggestion for a new university dedicated to the late president was raised in Parliament by a Labor MP the day Prime Minister Sir Alec Douglas - Home announced there would be a national memorial.

Patrick Gordon Walker, Labor's shadow foreign secretary, took it up in a letter to The Times suggesting "a university we would not otherwise have founded, to be called Kennedy University."

FUND GROWS

Meanwhile the fund launched Nov. 24 by the Sunday Telegraph for a London statue of the president is snowballing at the rate of 700 contributions a day. Individuals are asked not to send more than £1—many of the donations are shillings and half-crowns from school children. Already the fund has reached £10,000.

Suggestions on the type and situation of the statue are flooding in with the donations. A Vancouver man living in London, A. C. Williams, echoes many sentiments with his view that it should be placed with that of Franklin D. Roosevelt in Grosvenor Square, overlooked by the U.S. Embassy.

U.S. Probes Diversion Of Grain

WASHINGTON (AP)—An investigation is continuing into reported illegal diversion of more than 500,000 metric tons of U.S. grains from their destination in Austria to ineligible European countries.

Under terms of contracts written under U.S. foreign aid program provisions, Austria is the only country in Western Europe fully eligible to receive barter shipments of feed grains under open-end contracts, representative Jamie L. Whitten (Dem. Miss.) said.

In a report submitted to Congress, Whitten, chairman of a House of Representatives agricultural appropriations subcommittee looking into the grain transactions, said an investigation begun by the executive branch of government in January 1963 should extend well into 1964.

He said the investigation so far shows that of a total of 568,428 metric tons of grain which did not reach Austria, 448,656 metric tons, or 79 per cent, have been accounted for by investigation in Germany.

Some 10,015 tons found its way into Communist East Germany, Whitten said in his report published in the congressional record.

Whitten said that no evidence has been developed to indicate that American barter contractors were in any way involved in the conspiracy to divert the feed grains, estimated to be worth $30,000,000.

Opening lead—jack of spades.

Let's say you have the East hand and are defending three notrump. West leads the jack of spades and declarer wins it with the queen and plays the king of diamonds, your partner following with the eight. How would you defend the hand?

Of course, you don't see the declarer's card, but, just the same, you can pretty much tell what he has. He opened the bidding with two notrump, showing 22 to 24 points, and he is therefore bound to have the A-K-Q of spades, the A-K of hearts, the K-J of diamonds and the queen of clubs. Those are the only high cards missing, and they come to exactly 22 points.

The first problem is whether to take the king of diamonds. West's eight indicates either a singleton, which means the contract cannot be defeated, or a doubleton, which means that declarer started with K-J-X. In either case, it does not matter whether you win the trick now or later, so let's assume you take the king with the ace.

The next problem is what to return. If you make the neutral return of the queen of hearts or a spade, it is obvious that South will wind up with at least nine tricks, since he will next force out the queen of diamonds and eventually score three spades, two hearts, three diamonds and a club.

So what you do to prevent this from happening is return the king of clubs. You don't know whether this play will defeat the contract, but you do know that no other play has a chance of stopping three notrump.

As it happens, the king of clubs return defeats the contract. It turns out that partner has the vital ten of clubs, and, since you refuse to take the jack of diamonds on the next diamond lead, South is unable to collect more than eight tricks. Killing dummy's only entry by sacrificing the king of clubs proves to be the decisive play.
