'Century Farms' To Be Recognized

By NANCY WHITE

Attention will focus on old Prince Edward Island farms next month as the agricultural sub-committee of the Centennial Committee offers recognition to "Century Farms", those which have been registered in the same name for 100 years or more.

The sub-committee, headed up by Max Thompson of Victoria, asks that families owning such farms fill out application blanks which will appear in this paper within a few days) telling certain details about the properties and mail this information to the committee.

The form the recognition will take will depend to some extent on the number of applications received. It has been estimated there may be 500 Island farms which could meet the requirements.

The stipulations are simple. To qualify, a farm must be in active operation and it must have been held in the same name for at least a century. (Farms in the name of a widow will qualify.)

The committee also asks that "a brief historical sketch of any important items, persons, or occurrences" connected with the farm or family be included with the application.

Working with Mr. Thompson on the committee are Norman Black, of the Experimental Farm and David Rogers, of the department of agriculture.

It is expected that the "Century Farms" will be given signs inscribed with the Centennial symbol and the words "Century Farm 1964".

This designation of the Island's oldest homesteads will serve as an aid to researchers and people collecting for museums, as well as provide recognition for "tenacity on the part of farm families", a Centennial committee official said yesterday.

LADY'S SLIPPERS

The "century farms" project is only one of several currently in the planning stages by the agricultural committee.

Transplanting of a number of Cypripedium acaule (Lady's Slippers, to those of us who are less botanically inclined) has already been undertaken.

Last fall committee member, George Ayers travelled from New Perth to Alberton in search of the rare Island floral emblem. The plants were transplanted into a bed at the Experimental Farm and are expected to bloom next summer.

The Junior Farmers will undertake a search for a farm property which is typical of a farm of 100 years ago. Possibly the owners will be encouraged to open it up to visitors.

Leaving Scene Of Accident Brings Fine

SUMMERSIDE — Bertram Charles Ayers, Wellington Centre, was fined $125 and costs in county court by Magistrate W. Chester S. MacDonald yesterday for leaving the scene of an accident in which a vehicle he was driving was involved.

A charge of failing to stop at a stop sign against a Summerside man was dismissed when the accused said he stopped at the stop sign, then proceeded slowly into the intersection because he could not see far enough down the highway because of snow banks blocking his vision.

The case of James Stewart Hunter, Kensington, charged with breaking and entering the Kensington Co-op last October, was set for hearing Feb. 20.

Sentencing of Eldon Casey, Summerside, who pleaded guilty to having possession of stolen auto parts last fall, was further adjourned to April 30.

STARTED EARLY

There were 25 motorcars in Prince Edward Island in 1913, and their use was restricted to three days a week.

HALIFAX (CP) — The weather office says a weak weather disturbance passed through Nova Scotia Thursday evening, and by late evening snow was still falling in Cape Breton and the eastern part of Nova Scotia. However, clear dry air covers the remainder of the district.

The disturbance will move east into the Atlantic, carrying the cloudy skies and flurries with it overnight. By early morning cold clear air will cover the Maritimes.

A southwesterly flow of mild air will begin moving into New Brunswick this afternoon and into Nova Scotia by evening. Thus following a cold day Friday, temperatures will become a little milder in most of the district by evening.

Regional forecasts:

Halifax and Vicinity, South Shore, Annapolis Valley, Northern Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island: Clear and cold; turning a little milder by evening; light winds increasing by evening to south 15.
