the membership of this House for many years past," he said, "I do not suppose there were any two men who were more popular. We all remember the friendly, genial smile of Adrien. We remember his witty speeches. He was always interesting in debate; one whom all members of the House delighted to hear."

Of the late Mr. Sharp, Dr. MacMillan said "a finer man never stood on two feet in Canada. He was honest, honourable and upright, with a high sense of his duties and responsibilities. He had administered two important departments, those of Agriculture and Public Works, under conditions of extreme difficulty. At his largely attended funeral the speaker noted many poor people from Lennox Island, and the poor, he added, will miss Shelton Sharp. The Indians will miss him, because he was generous and gave to all those who were in need. He was a true friend to everyone in this House, and he endeavored to express in this regard."

Referring to the passing of two former Governors General, the Duke of Connaught and the Marquis of Cornwallis, Dr. MacMillan said they had left examples of duty to public service, of fidelity to the highest ideals, which were well worthy of emulation.

He also dwelt on the inspiring example shown by the Royal Family during wartime. He suggested that to be seen in the future, as was done by Hitler in invading Russia, and other countries, to be in the full fury of the German onslaught, when Japan or Italy, suspecting the plans he was making, would be also paid to the magnificent achievement of China in standing up to the Japanese.

Commenting on recent British reverses, Dr. MacMillan said it was an example of the fickleness of human nature that Prime Minister Chamberlain, of all persons, should be made the subject of a campaign of foolish criticism. There were those who wanted to substitute Japan or Cripps for Churchill, but the speaker believed the British people have too much sense to do so.

He referred to the time before the last war, Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener tried to arouse the British people to arm before it was too late.

A Sad Example
"If you want an example in this country," Dr. MacMillan continued, "you can go back to the days of Sir Robert Borden. When Borden attended an Imperial Conference he was advised that a greater navy would be needed in case of war, and Canada was asked to provide three cruisers. That matter came before the Canadian Parliament. Read the pages of Hansard and see what the attitude was of certain men in this country at that time. That bill was fought, and closure was applied to get it through. When the bill came into the Senate, the eternal disgrace of the members of the Senate at that time is thrown out. And when the war came in August 1914, Canada was in the position of being the only part of the British Empire that did not have a warship or a cruiser to add to the fleet of Great Britain."

"That parallel can be drawn between the war in 1914, when the British Government made overtures to the Canadian Government regarding this Commonwealth air training. Unfortunately, those overtures were neglected, and two years were lost. Who among us, Mr. Speaker, will put a value upon that lost time? We will estimate the cost of those two years.

"Even the other day, in a Toronto newspaper, I noticed this statement: 'Singapore provides a tragic example of the need of bombers and fighters to stop the Japanese. A hundred might have made the difference between victory and defeat.'"

It was also stated that "most of last summer the big Canadian factory where Hurricane frames are made, was working part time. Trained aircraft workers were laid off by the hundreds for lack of contracts. Last month in Ottawa itself, an air frame factory let out 500 hands; again for lack of contracts. And Singapore fell for lack of planes!"

"Is that what some speakers have called Canada's colossal war effort? It has been only because there is not any doubt that if Mr. Meighen were in the House of Commons he would do his utmost to further the efforts of our Government in order to win this struggle."

Continuing Dr. MacMillan asked why airplane engines cannot be built in this country. He pointed to the Atlatla, with much smaller industrial resources, is building them.

He cited recent heavy losses of British destroyers and other ships in the struggle to defend Java. We must, he said, prepare for terrible days ahead. Every man, woman and child must be harnessed to our war effort.

He also warned against the danger of a pessimistic frame of mind. He said that the spirit of initiative and independence should be revived.

"If there is anything to be done for agriculture," added Dr. MacMillan, "I think this House will speak with one voice on the subject. If the Government has anything to propose that will help our farmers, I know that every man in the House will support it to the utmost."

There was no reason, he said, why we should not be producing more poultry of all kinds. It is ridiculous to see poultry being imported from the West into the Maritime Provinces, and comment on our body politic, and our initiative as a people.

Farm Help Needed
One big problem, the speaker recognized, was shortage of farm labor. The period of selective service bears heavily on some families. An only son may be taken for service on one farm, while on a neighboring farm boys from twenty-five to thirty years of age are not touched. There should be some means of redistributing such grievances. "If you want the farmer to produce more you must leave his boys with him who are needed on the farm, or how is he going to do it?" the speaker asked amid applause.

Income tax returns, Dr. MacMillan noted, show a vast increase for every part of the country. This results from the fact that every other province in Canada is doing war work which is bringing thousands and even millions of dollars into those provinces. Prince Edward Island seems to be neglected altogether in this regard. "But when they ask for men to go into the service, for Prince Edward Island answers—answers with a voice that resounds across the other part of Canada. When the Federal Government goes out with their Victory loans and asks us for a million and a half dollars, Prince Edward Island answers; twice Prince Edward Island has replied by lending nearly two millions each time."

In the Red Cross drive, he continued, we were asked for $25,000 and gave $32,000. When the Auxiliary War Service wanted $30,000 from us, we gave $70,000. There is no doubt about the spirit and loyalty of our province. We are the best of Canada. Surely some war work can be done in Prince Edward Island, as well as elsewhere.

Dr. MacMillan said that the Wood Islands ferry will be of some help in winter, when help is needed, she will not be a very good ferry, he cautioned, in one trip cannot carry to this Island the daily necessities of our airports. He said he had never heard where would we get an ice breaker?

Dr. MacMillan expressed concern about the prospects of the tourist industry, which was being profitably developed here. He was also concerned about the possible effect on provincial revenue of the rationing of gasoline.

Farming Conditions
Farming conditions, he said, were admittedly unsatisfactory in this Province. The matter of the quota on the British market, and there is shortage of 2,000,000 hogs to meet this demand. Why cannot we raise more hogs in this Province? The Federal Department should encourage such production by every means possible. Our people, also, should be doing more to help themselves. The old time pioneer spirit of initiative and independence should be revived.

note the assurance in the Throne Speech that "every possible economy" was being practiced by the Government. "I hope that is true," he said, "if so it will be the first time in the history of this Government."

He approved of suspending capital expenditures during the war, as mentioned in the Speech. In conclusion, the speaker reviewed the work of the Red Cross Society, and stressed the great importance of continuing aid through this channel to our prisoners of war. The Canadian Red Cross is now packing 30,000 parcels of food a week for war prisoners; they weigh 10 pounds and cost $2.00 each. Over 700,000 of these parcels have already been sent out, and the Society now has a request from Great Britain for 40,000 additional parcels.

Emphasis was placed on the importance of the fortifying Red Cross drive, which will take place in May or June. It is hoped to raise about $15,000,000 in Canada; about $50,000 from this Province.

ON ELECTRIC CORDS
Do not allow electric cords to become knotted or kinked, and never hang them over sharp surfaces. They'll wear longer if they are carefully straightened and hung straight. Buy the best quality. Also, when disconnecting the appliance, do not pull on the cord, but remove the plug itself with a firm, quick motion.
