He is survived by his wife, one son William, Vancouver, B.C. and three daughters: Mrs. Carl Conner, A. M. Wright and Mrs. M. Horne, all living in Ottawa.

GOLDEN WEDDING-Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gauthier, North Rustico Harbor, had the honor and distinction of celebrating their fifty years of wedded bliss on November 27th. Their neighbours and friends called at their home to extend congratulations and good wishes. Many beautiful presents accompanied the good wishes, besides a very wonderful purse. All these things were extended to the happy couple with every good wish possible. The evening was spent in happy conversation and enjoyment. The friends departed wishing Mr. and Mrs. Gauthier that they live to celebrate their Diamond Jubilee.

A SPLENDID GIFT-The Royal Trust Co. received a very liberal donation yesterday of $50.00 from the Queen's Canadian Fund for the pupils and teachers of Summerside High School, the money to be used for the children's Christmas fund. This very generous donation was made up of pennies saved throughout the school term and was only one of the many donations made by these cheerful givers to patriotic causes. part, one for Rob's, one for the game across the line and one for James and myself - and Judy. There were three sizable containers of three distinct varieties to be divided. The best measures we could find were several potato baskets, each a different size. We were obliged to use all of them. Jamie, Judy and I were at the work, James hovered between the kitchen and the porch where we were busy. Many things came to my mind as we carefully filled baskets. There was the table of the boy who called on the other animals to divide certain spoils. But none of us wished for "the boy's share." Very few have and Colin MacDougall and his wife Mary Campbell. He left home when quite a young man and had the other person do it. There too there is the "rendering into Caesar" way, very fair and honest - but then who on a farm would split an apple one way or another?

Presently one container was opened and emptied of its contents all that was necessary. Under and over roasts, back and forth across the poultry-house James pursued and caught chickens to be carried them to fill the crate in the shed and when the last one was in James went and got a ready-made nail to hold it in place it was. James who took the bachelor's button from his pocket and fastened it on the chicken's security for their fattening. I smiled as I made my way to the house. I was thinking of that's words: "I remember an apple one way or another."

There was smoke belching from the flue of the Evert's boiler-house over on the hill. I stopped a minute by the front-window to watch it mingling with the grey of this morning. I realized as I saw it over-powered by the atmosphere and turned downward. This work of cooking potatoes in farmers' boilers for the inmates of the piggery is fast going out of practice. This is one fallow. I find myself looking for in vain at Alderlea. Not that I long for the heavy chore of carrying cull potatoes from cellar to boiler but I often begged to kindle the fire beneath it. And then stood, forgetful of indoor duties to see potatoes in the churning flames that presently made the great cauldron bubble merrily, its steam filling the entire building. I remembered this morning that long ago potatoes baked in the coals were more delicious than any others I have ever eaten. Perhaps I'm only indulging in a childish fancy. I'm going to try it out again somewhere as Tim would say "one of these fine days."

We went to a different than usual work before noon today. Rather delightful task but then even in all its fragrance and pleasant anticipation very perplexing to do. We divided some fruit this morning. A fruit as old as the hills; that has figured in history, almost since "the beginning." A fruit that woman "tempted with" and a man "did eat". That fell "thud" to the earth to start a man figuring on a new law; that placed on a boy's head, and split fair in two allowed a man to retain his self-respect. This was the fruit we apportioned in three equal
