Barbiturates Threat Ignored, British Psychiatrist Says

By CAROL KENNEDY

LONDON (CP) — Despite constant warnings in the medical press against the dangers of drug addiction, more and more Britons are becoming dependent on barbiturates prescribed for emotional stress, depression and insomnia, says a psychiatrist's report published Tuesday.

Suicides, attempted suicides and fatal accidents from barbiturates have also been increasing since the early 1950s, says the report, published in the medical journal of the British Academy for Forensic Sciences.

Barbiturates and other drugs affecting the central nervous system have accounted for one-fifth of all prescriptions issued under the National Health Service. In the six years 1953-59, consumption doubled — to 162,000 pounds from 81,000 pounds.

Consultant psychiatrist Dr. M. M. Glatt and statistician Eileen Brooke, who compiled the report, say that in spite of warning articles, consumption of the drugs continues unabated and "it is probable that there is also a rising prevalence of emotional and physical dependence on them."

SUICIDE RATE RISES

The researchers found that the number of suicides from barbiturate poisoning rose to an average rate of 735 a year in the four years 1958-62 from 104 a year in the whole decade 1941-50.

The suicide rate was higher among women than men, the researchers found, with the highest rate of poisoning occurring among women aged 45-64. It is these women, says the report, who are most likely to possess barbiturates that have been prescribed for emotional upsets accompanying the menopause.

Attempted suicides, more difficult to assess accurately, "probably" rose to 6,500 in 1962 from 1,500 in 1951.

The great increase in barbiturate prescriptions is attributed by a British Medical Association spokesman to "the stress and strain of modern living."

MONTREAL (CP) — Prices were steady in quiet trade on the east end livestock market today. Demand was slow.

Good vealers 30.50-33.50, medium 24-28.50, common 11.50-19.

SINGER ACQUITTED

NEW YORK (AP) — Pop singer Fran Warren was cleared Tuesday of a narcotics charge. A grand jury declined to indict her, and Supreme Court Justice Mitchell J. Schweitzer ordered dismissal of the narcotics possession charge which had been lodged against the 38-year-old nightclub entertainer. Police had reported that officers found four ounces of marijuana concealed in her apartment Oct. 13 last.
