Commissioners Called Traitors In Article

QUEBEC (CP) — In an article entitled "How a Traitor is Made," the weekly Le Temps, official organ of Quebec province's Union Nationale party, describes the president of the CBC and French - language members of the royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism as traitors to French Canada.

The weekly compares the royal commission to the royal commission on arts, letters and sciences, which it describes as "the famous Massey - Levesque centralizing commission which permitted Ottawa to invade the constitutional domain reserved to the provinces." Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey, former governor-general, and Very Rev. Georges - Henri Levesque, former dean of social sciences at Laval University, were chairman and vice - chairman, respectively, of the arts commission.

In its criticism of members of the royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism, the article mentions that one of the members is a priest. He was not named. Rev. Clement Cormier of the University of New Brunswick is a member of the commission.

The article says members of the commission are devoting themselves "at high salaries to the defence of federal interests." The article also says the salary of Alphonse Ouimet, president of the CBC, recently was doubled.

"It is thus that traitors are created," says the article.

"Ottawa needs accomplices. It is unnerved by Quebec's nationalism; thus it must find right in Quebec, the traitors who will do good jobs, ones that the, dictators and the tyrants themselves cannot do.

"Mr. Pearson did not have to look far. The traitors are already in place. They are sitting on the Laurendeau-Dunton commission, in the presidency of the CBC. . . ."

The article describes the CBC as the "rich and costly headquarters of Liberal and socialistic propaganda." All publicity was refused extremists, independent elements, and those who no longer believed in Confederation or in the Ottawa government.

In Ottawa, no ranking CBC officials were available for comment. CBC president Alphonse Ouimet was out of town on vacation.

Employment Service Slated For New Look, Bigger Role

By ROBERT RICE

OTTAWA (CP)A proposal to give the National Employment Service a new look and a bigger role in co-ordinating manpower policy and employment programs will be placed before the federal cabinet soon, a reliable source said here.

If the cabinet approves, the employment service will be shifted from the Unemployment Insurance Commission into the federal labor department.

The transfer was recommended by the Gill inquiry committee as part of its blueprint for overhauling the unemployment insurance program and meeting the future manpower needs of the nation.

Government sources say the move could be made by cabinet order, without legislative action in Parliament.

Labor department officials see NES in a new role as the frontline link between workers and the various government manpower programs for retraining and relocating workers in the era of technological change.

The agency would be more than just a job - placement agency trying to match job openings with available workers.

It would gather information diagnosing why certain workers are unable to keep jobs, then prescribing remedial action under government retraining or relocation programs.

NEW AWARENESS

In addition, the service would make the government aware of new problems and needs that may be arising in the labor market.

It would act as a job doctor, on changes in industry and their impact on jobs, then feed it back to the government as the basis for formulating new policy.

In this new role, labor experts say, the work of the employment service should be meshed with the labor department, thus eliminating the division of responsibilities under the present UIC-labor department setup.

A step in this direction was taken when Labor Minister MacEachen gave NES a more significant role in implementing the older - worker employment and training incentive program. Under this experimental idea employers are offered government subsidies up to $75 a month for hiring workers aged 45 and older from the ranks of the jobless.

The employment service was set up in 1941 at the same time as the Unemployment Insurance Commission, but it was created as a wing of the commission. Throughout its history NES has operated under the shadow of the unemployment insurance plan.

The emphasis seemed to be on unemployment, not on employment. The shift of NES to the labor department would alter this accent, labor department sources say.

Gov't Marine Union Trustees Come Under Labor Criticism

By ROBERT RICE

OTTAWA (CP)—The government's marine union trustees are coming under critical fire from organized labor for the way they appear to be handling the Great Lakes labor situation.

Crux of the mounting criticism is the fact that Hal C. Banks is still president of the Seafarers' International Union of Canada—despite the findings of a federal inquiry commission that he dominates seamen by tyranny, terror and corruption.

The Canadian Labor Congress has urged the trustees to oust Mr. Banks before ships begin moving in April through the St. Lawrence Seaway and in the Great Lakes.

The suggestion was placed before the trustees—along with some other ideas—at a closed-door meeting in Montreal Monday.

A spokesman for the trustees said there are no plans to remove Mr. Banks before the start of the 1964 shipping season.

The trustees, said the spokesman, are continuing the policy they adopted when they took office in October after Parliament passed the unprecedented Marine Transportation Unions Trusteeship Act—a policy that no union officer will be removed during the trusteeship unless the trustees feel such action becomes necessary.

Up to now, the spokesman added, Mr. Banks has co-operated with the trustees.

The top officers of the CLC are understood to have warned the trustees that a shutdown with Mr. Banks is inevitable. They feel that Mr. Banks should be ousted from office now, with the trustees moving in under their federal powers to manage and control the SIU until democratic processes can be restored.

This view was expressed publicly in a sharply-worded editorial in the latest issue of the official newspaper of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers, one of the five unions under trusteeship.

"The trustees seem to have the idea that they are merely supervisors and custodians, whose job is to enforce peace and order between the unions themselves and between unions and ship - owners," said the CBRT editorial.

CLEAN UP SIU

The CBRT said the real job of the trustees is to clean up the SIU — "ousting its hoodlum leadership, wiping out the infamous do-not-ship lists and other questionable hiring hall methods, and putting the democratic control of the union in the hands of its members."

While the CLC officers were meeting the trustees in Montreal, representatives of the CBRT and the three other unions under the trusteeship conferred in Ottawa. They are reported reliably to have passed a strongly-worded resolution attacking the trustees for not taking decisive action to housecleanse the SIU.

So far, the text of the resolution has been kept private.

Opening lead— queen of diamonds.

There are many hands where one play is the key to the success or failure of the contract. Here is an unusual case where declarer's opening play turned out to be decisive.

The hand occurred in a team match. At both tables the contract was four hearts and at both tables the lead was the queen of diamonds.

At the first table, declarer covered the queen with the king and East took the ace and returned a diamond. West won and shifted to the nine of clubs.

East took the ten with the jack and returned a spade. South had to lose another club trick later and wound up going down one. Of course, South was unlucky to find East with both club honors, but that's the way the wheel sometimes spins.

The declarer at the second table succeeded in making the contract when he played the three of diamonds from dummy on the opening lead.

Against this play there was no defense to beat the contract. If West had shifted to a club at this point, South could have assured the contract by going up with the ace and later discarding the king of diamonds from dummy on one of his high spades.

But West led another diamond at trick two and East was in with the ace. He could now do no better than return a spade, which South took in dummy with the queen.

Declarer drew two rounds of trumps, cashed two more rounds of spades, discarding a club from dummy, and then played a club to the ten. East won with the jack, but he now had to lead a club into the A-Q or else give declarer a ruff and discard. So South made four hearts as a result of his play at trick one.

The second declarer realized that East was bound to have the ace of diamonds, and that by ducking the queen he was assuring the contract regardless of how the clubs were distributed.
