Living & Leisure —The Woman's Realm

JUST ONE WAY

Isn't it strange that princes and kings And clowns who caper in sawdust rings And common folk like you and me Are building for eternity?

To each is given a bag of tools, A sheaf of mass and a book of rules, And each must build ere life has flown, A stumbling block or a stepping stone.

To glaze waffles, spread each one after it is baked, with melted butter and a little granulated sugar or confectioner's sugar. Then slip it under the broiler for a minute. This applies to pancakes, too.

Salads: A Croque au Lait, which may be served in a French dress, or may be made with sliced green and white shrimps. Garnish with quarters of hard-cooked eggs.

REMARKABLE GLOW CARPET

A carpet that glows in the dark has been developed for sleeping chambers and lavatory illuminated places. Certain dyes absorb invisible ultra-violet light and reflect it as a bright glow. These are used to treat the wool of the carpet before it is woven. Not only is the carpet visible but the details of the pattern stand out strikingly. The equipment necessary to make the carpet fluoresce is not elaborate. Special lamps are fitted with filters that allow only the invisible ultra-violet rays of light to pass. These rays are produced by sun-tan lamps. In public places the lamps will be concealed in the ceiling and walls and patrons will not know of their existence.

BE CAREFUL IN HOT SUN

The cosmetics counter of your favorite store is fairly blooming with sun-tan preparations to intrigue the sun-worshipper. The sun-worshipper that is who has no intention of letting her enthusiasm for sunshine result in blisters, peeling patches or that lobster-red look.

There are films, oils, creams and lotions, which, if applied exactly according to directions, will absolutely prevent burning and encourage a smooth, even coat of tan—light, dark or medium, as you choose.

There are items that shut out all tanning rays of the sun and will completely prevent tanning. And—for those who will just go out and get sunburned anyway, there are treatment creams, lotions, and oils.

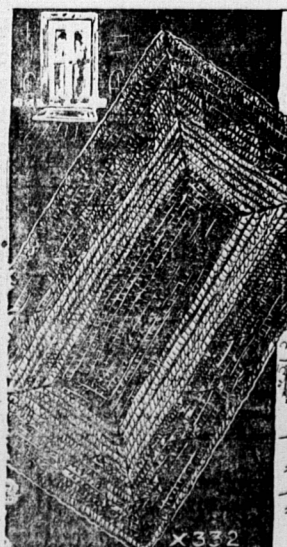

For a really bad case of sunburn, however, call a doctor. Now, to get back to the fascinating array of sunburn preventives and sun-tan-encouragers, there are sun-tan oils in capsules. One capsule contains enough oil to cover the skin. Week-end hostesses are putting a few capsules in each guest room as well as tucking them into the corners of beach bags.

And a new lipstick, made by a company which specializes in sun-tan lotions, contains some of the sunburn preventive ingredients of the lotion. A waterproof foundation cream—a great favorite of the Hollywood stars—will keep makeup in place during a swim.

Stickers for packages come in dozens of silver bells, in little baby faces and in the shape of small signs that say "Best Wishes". So the paraphernalia for non-Christmas presents is complete, and there's no need to excuse for not doing a good job of wrapping them. People whose fingers are all thumbs and can't make a neat package with all the will in the world may have their presents wrapped at the store that carries the wrappings. The charge is small.

CUSTOMS TO PLEASE HIM

"I dress as he pleases," was the theme of the spring fashion show held at the luncheon hour in the Persian and Terrace Rooms of the Hotel Plaza in New York. The promenade was divided into four classifications, with types that would please "him" for country wear, for luncheon, for cocktails and for dinner.

The costume for spring was recommended in longcoat expression, with the print of the dress repeated in the collar, lining, and sometimes in the cuffs. The jackets, however, appeared frequently, sometimes in long hip-line versions, and also in shorter lengths—bolero and waist-line.

Coats for town wear aside from bloused types were easily fitted and flared, sometimes buttoning up to the neckline.

Coats for country wear, built on freer lines, adopted gay fabrics, with bold plaids approved, and plaids also appeared in country suits.

Dinner and evening fashions were divided into slim and tailored and wide and frothy types. The slim-line and blue alliance was presented in a gray boyie jacket, navy blue slim line skirt and white mannish jacket.

More glamorous were be-rufted gowns in black lace, chignon, ruffled in a hood, and the jacket, draped from shoulder to neckline, and white starched chiffon gowns with black lace bodice and hood.

There are some floor-length printed chiffon for evening, sleeveless and with high décolletés.

MOVIE FLOWERS ARTIFICIAL

Blooms Used on Screen Sets Must Be Lasting

The flowers used in motion pictures for the most part are artificial, although they cost more to make than real blooms, even more so. One of Hollywood's leading florists estimates that the material and time used to manufacture an orchid costs the studio about $5, which would buy a corsage of real orchids.

"But we can't use real flowers during winter months," he explained, "because they are so perishable and often the ones we want are not blooming at the time."

Another reason why artificial flowers are used is that sometimes scenes have to be retaken and then it is almost impossible to match the flowers previously used if real blooms were employed. But the artificial blooms are stored in the property department and if they have been handled too much to be used again, Murdock can duplicate them.

The studios have found, he says, that real flowers wilt when they are brought out from refrigeration to the sound stages which are superheated by hundreds of incandescent lamps.

Many colors do not register with the artificial eye of the camera and that is another drawback to the use of real flowers, Murdock finds. Red, for example, photographs black in all but technical pictures.

Murdock says he is no botanist and he also does not copy his flowers. Even years of handling flowers, he knows what colors to use and depends almost entirely upon memory.

MANAGING MOTHERS DESERVE CREDIT FOR DOING GOOD JOB

Making Daughters Popular By Providing Proper Home Atmosphere Usually Leads To Suitable Marriages

One of the women who has always been held up to scorn is the MANAGING MOTHER who schemes and plans to get her daughter well married. This criticism of a woman who is simply doing her manifold duty has always seemed to me most unjust. I believe we do that marriage is the career for which nature destined women and the one in which they are most likely to be happy and prosperous, why shouldn't a mother make every effort to help her girls get good husbands? We all know that for a girl to be popular and have good times and plenty of boy friends and eventually to marry Mr. Right depends just as much upon her mother as it does upon her own attractions. It isn't enough for a girl to have naturally curly hair and melting blue eyes and be a living picture. She is too young to know how to exploit her charms. And, above all, she needs to be provided with a right background. And that is where Mother gets in her fine work.

A girl may be Miss America herself and still have to spend her evenings alone with Mama and Papa, reading an improving book, if she has no mother who can give her the proper background. A girl may be a beauty and a social success, but if she has no mother who can give her the proper background, she is likely to be a failure.

But far otherwise is the situation if, instead of her job, a mother may not be an eye for an eye, but she is not the slightest danger of never setting anything on fire with her brilliance.

But from the time she was a small girl, mother has made her a social success. She has given her girls with whom she has always been jolly and lively at her home. There was always something going on. You can always roll up the rug and turn on the radio and dance.

And Mabel's mother made every-body feel welcome, and fed 'em, and when SHE came into the room she came with a cake or sandwiches in her hand.

You see Mabel's mother has built up Mabel's matrimonial chances, so to speak, through the years, and when Mabel gets ready to marry, she will not only have a lot of men to choose from, but many men will be eager to marry her. She will be so interwoven with all the pleasant memories of her youth, and because they subconsciously think she was the nice sort of person her mother is.

The MANAGING MOTHER does a lot of things that her mother does knows how often propinquity does eyes. "Don't you think it was a bit of a coincidence?"

Southern Atlantic Legacy

BY SYDNEY PARKMAN

"Not in money, perhaps," he said seriously. "But there's that letter, you know. I've been thinking over it every night, and it seems to me that he has fallen into the hands of the blackguards. And in that case, they would do anything to get their hands on it. I don't know how to get it out of them. I don't know how to get it out of them. I don't know how to get it out of them."

"It's funny," she interrupted. "But both Father Maloney and Toby have been saying the same thing. I pointed out to them that if that were the case, they would probably have a shot at holding me up, for they wouldn't know that I'd handed it over to someone else to keep. They'd have to know that I'd settled the matter now, as far as the plan's concerned—though I don't see that it makes things any safer."

"How'd you mean—settled it?" the Major demanded in some agitation. "You don't mean you've given it to one of the other men out there?"

"No," she said calmly. "Nobody's got it now, for it doesn't exist any longer. I burned it."

"You burned it?" he repeated, staring at her with horror-struck eyes.

"Yes," she said dramatically. "Burned it and scattered the ashes to the four winds! So no one will ever see it again. I regarded him with laughter in his eyes. 'But before I did that, I got it off by heart,' she continued. 'It wasn't like any other letter. It was a word-perfect how. I could recite it off in my sleep—and that's the only way anyone else could get hold of it. They'd have to hypnotize me first. Don't you think it's a good idea, Father Maloney thought of it.'"

The Major gaped at her speechless for a moment. He almost looked as though Maloney had had some idea of what was in the wind, and had taken this step to ensure that it would be known. Of course, he knew the contents of the destroyed letter—he had probably made a copy of it before they had appeared on the scene. She had succeeded in convincing them of the hopelessness of locating the letter, he would have the field to himself.

It was a maddening situation, and he stared at his daughter helplessly. Obviously he couldn't ask her for a copy of the letter. He had no right, for he would be able to advance no reason without explaining what he intended to do with it—then, was out of the question. She would never believe the priest's perjury without absolute proof—the complete confidence and unless she could be convinced of that, he knew it was hopeless to expect her collaboration. And it would be equally useless to attempt to compel her.

"Why, what's the matter, Daddy?" she demanded, puzzled by his silence and the look of despair in his
