Freed Vietnamese Describe Concentration Camp Torture

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (AP)—Vietnamese freed from concentration camps set up by Ngo Dinh Diem's regime told here of torture on naked bodies, of blinding and mutilation.

Scores of students of both sexes declared inquisitors forced them to drink soapy water until their intestines poured blood. A high school youth, Nguyen Van, was reported beaten to death.

Some prisoners were blinded in the drive for information about Buddhist and student movements against Diem and his adviser-brother, Ngo Dinh Nhu, who headed the secret police.

Fingers were chopped off others.

Miss Hoang Thi Dong, 29, a pretty typist, told with an embarrassed smile of her ordeal in the custody of the secret police Nov. 1, a few hours before the outbreak of the coup that destroyed Diem. She said she was taken from a cell-like room where she was confined with six others girls and six men.

"They stripped me, tied me over a bench, choked me with water and a towel and beat me until I was unconscious," she said.

DENIED CHARGES

A Buddhist employed at the British embassy, Miss Dong said that was her treatment when she denied charges that she was a Communist and that she had served as a courier for Buddhist documents smuggled to foreign correspondents, the United Nations fact-finding mission and the U.S. information service.

A Vietnamese employed by the U.S. aid mission, Vu Hoang Linh, said 46 prisoners were locked in a small cell under the sun at the Le Van Quyeh camp and "many became unconscious."

Thousands rejoicing here at the military coup welcomed home from a penal colony some participants in an abortive anti-Diem uprising of Nov. 11-12, 1960. Officers involved on the losing side of the bloody outbreak three years ago were among 33 political prisoners freed from imprisonment on the Poule Condore Islands, in the South China Sea 150 miles south of Saigon.

The group arrived amid cheers at a flag-draped pier on the Saigon River. The reception committee included representatives of the revolutionary government newly recognized by the United States and Britain.

MORALE HIGH

Among other post-coup developments:

A senior U.S. military spokesman said "all reports indicate Vietnamese officer morale throughout the entire country has risen strikingly." He told reporters that, if this can be translated into action afield, "our timetable for victory against Communist guerrill s should be shortened." The Pentagon's view has been that the need for major U.S. involvement will be ended by December, 1965.

The government announced the state of martial law imposed with the coup has ended throughout South Viet Nam. A curfew order and censorship of press dispatches were lifted Thursday.

Reliable sources said Tran Van Khiem, a younger brother of the widowed Mme. Ngo Dinh Nhu, is under arrest in Saigon. He had only recently accepted a high political security post in Diem's administration.

OTTAWA (Special) — Information has been sought in the House of Commons by Heath MacQuarrie, MP for Queens, on the proposed new Canadian National Railway's building to be erected in Charlottetown.

How many qualified as being eligible for appointment? Where the examination was held and who were the members of the examining board?
