Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, it was with the approbation of many, of all ranks and classes of society, who conceived that such a change would be beneficial, if carried out in a truly constitutional spirit; and who were willing to give the aid of their talents and influence, for the purpose of effecting it. At this time, you stood in as favorable a situation, as a political man could well wish to stand. You had a majority in both Houses, well affected towards the measure, the end was determined on, the only question was as to the means. And this was left for you to have shown your political sagacity and foresight, if you had possessed either. It then became you carefully to look around you before you took the first step, sensible—as you ought to have been—that much of the result would depend upon the direction in which that was taken. Had you then listened to the dictates of that calm calculating prudence, without which no man ever can expect to rise to great elevation, or keep himself there when he has attained it, you would have learned, that your best and safest policy would have been to have effected the change with as little harshness as possible; and that every thing, that could in justice be demanded, ought to be freely and frankly conceded, while, at the same time, whatever might be in the power of courtesy to grant, should have been delicately and respectfully tendered. In the great, as well as in the little games of life, much more forbearance is expected and required of the winner than the loser; an expression of dissatisfaction with the turn fortune has taken is always allowed to the latter, while any indication of triumph which may grate on the feelings of the unfortunate, is considered in bad taste, and the mark of an ill-regulated mind. But what was your conduct, and that of your associates? Did it never occur to you, or them, that though a change of system was desirable, though it might be necessary to deprive those in power of their offices; that these gentlemen, generally, if not universally, stood high in the public esteem as men; that the quarrel was not, and ought not to have been, with them, but with the system under which they acted; that as they had not been the originators of it, so they were not answerable for its defects; that the worst that could be said of them was, that they had been faithful servants in the establishment of which they formed a part, an establishment which, however proper and fit it might have been for the infancy of the Colonies, was insufficient and improper for their more mature growth? The answer is plain and obvious: it did not. The only thing that did occur to you and them was, that you were possessed of a majority in the lower House; that you could,—as you thought,—by refusing the supplies, force the government into any and every measure you saw fit to adopt; that you had the power, and was determined to use it, careless and reckless what abuses might follow its exercise; in other words, you suffered passion to usurp the helm instead of reason, and what was the result? You were well nigh wrecked on the rocks of your own seeking. The means you had recourse to, and the loss of honor, reputation, and, consequently, of friends, that you then suffered, I shall by and by show you. In the mean time, let me tell you, if you are not aware of it, that you commed of it, and under a great mistake, when you think that a mere majority in the Assembly will suffice to keep you in power. Without it, it is true, you can do nothing; but unless the measures which this majority will enable you to carry through, be founded on something more stable than popular opinion; unless a profound knowledge of the real wants of the Island, and the best method of supplying those wants, arising from an intimate acquaintance with its past history, its resources, and the means of making those available, accompany the deliberations of your Cabinet, in a very short time their emptiness and futility will be easily made manifest: and the ill-matched, ill-assorted body, of which you are the ostensible head, will be shattered into pieces. Before entering upon a deliberate review of the evils of your Administration from the beginning, I purpose, for the benefit of the public, as well as of yourself, to give a short historical account of the Island, previous to the commencement of Responsible Government, in order that we may be well assured of what was sound, as well as what was defective in our Constitution; for unless we are in possession of this knowledge, we are working in the dark; nor can we form a just estimate of the reform that has, as you are in the habit of saying, been so happily achieved. It is also my intention not to withhold any expression of praise or approbation that may be found justly due; while, at the same time, any thing that may be found worthy of reprehension, shall not be passed over in silence, nor without its just meed of censure: herein obeying the injunction given by Cicero to all those who treat of public events:—

"Ut ne quid falsi dicere audeat, ne quid veri non audeat." "Not to dare to say any thing that is false, and not to be afraid to tell that which is true."

I am, in the mean time,
Your obedient Servant,
PROPOSITI TENAX.

Extract of a letter from F. N Gisborne, agent for the Newfoundland Telegraph Company, to the Hon. Mr. Young.

"I have to acknowledge your esteemed favours of 21th March and 30th April; in reply to which, allow me to inform you that the Newfoundland Company has been organized in New York. I need not enter into any further particulars concerning our organization, and official proceedings, as Mr. Keepe, (the Company's Secretary,) has been instructed to forward you a correct copy of them. We have determined, at all events, to connect your Island with the New Brunswick line, by a Sub-marine Cable, this summer, preparatory to connecting at Cape East, via Cape Ray, or via Capes Ray, North and Mabou. To-morrow I leave for Boston, and by the 'Canada,' on Wednesday, for England Immediately on my return, it is proposed that I shall step on board the Company's Steam Yacht at Halifax, and proceed on to Charlottetown, and then and there commence operations on the Prince Edward Island line, so that you may expect a visit from me about the 20th July; meanwhile Mr. Keepe and myself will take care, that you are duly advised as to our proceedings."
