IN MEMORIAM

JOHN H. MUNN

John H. Munn of Bothwell, P. E. Island at his home of paralysis on May 26th. Mr. Munn was well known on the Island and in different parts of the United States. He was a man of splendid physique and of rare intelligence and he was a brilliant conversationalist. Added to these gifts were a kind heart and a generous attitude toward his fellow men, a stability of purpose, and a practical interest in the benevolent movements of the day. A son who deceased him several years, a widow, who has the deep sympathy of the community, survives him. The funeral service was conducted at his late residence by Rev. W. R. MacWalker and at the graveside by the members of the local Orange Lodge. Past Master Seth MacLean conducting the service.

BOYS DROWNED AT FORT WILLIAM

FORT WILLIAM, June 4.—Two young lads were drowned in the Kaminitiquia river here Friday when they went in wading and evidently stepped into deep water. The boys are Glenn Blawett, 7 years old and Clarence Jackson, 8 years old. The bodies have been recovered. The spot where the boys had gone in wading was marked by a dog owned by one of the boys, sitting guard over a pair of stockings.

THE OUTLAW

The Story of a Girl Who Didn't Want to Marry

By ETHEL LLOYD PATT.

Chapter IX

So I carried out my determination and went to dinner with Dora I think, as a matter of fact, she subsequently would have been glad to shirk the obligation had it been possible. Her "gentlemen friends" as she phrased it, were "swells". They were accustomed to taking dinner with them. When Dora realized I would have to go with her in my white cotton shirt waist and plain black suit, which I wore every day, with my black sailor hat, I think she feared, as she would have said, that her friends would think she had "let them in for a lemon."

However, as I look back upon the situation, I think she behaved nobly about it. The worst Dora did was to give me every opportunity to withdraw my acceptance. Of course, I scarcely realized that she would just as soon not have me go with her. I wanted to go, and then Sarah's warnings had made me feel that I would go or die. The older girl had told me there was "nothing in" the sort of life that Dora led. Now to my childish and ignorant eyes Dora was pretty and attractive. Her attractions to me were enhanced by the jewels and clothes given her by her men acquaintances. Dora's mode of life could not mean very much to me with my lack of experience. I was at the age, too, when girls form those singularly loyal likes and dislikes. Just now I would not hear one word against Dora.

So, as I have said, I went with her on Saturday night for dinner, although I did feel ill at ease. It was the way in which Dora had dressed for the occasion. Not that she was in any way conspicuous. But even I who knew nothing of cost, could guess that the furs about her throat had been paid for by a sum of which I had never even dreamed. The shape and tilt of her hat eloquent of money. And the lines of her suit and the fit of her gloves and shoes were unimpeachable. I told myself a little bitterly that I must look like her servant.

Dora, however, had begun to get over her chagrin at my simple costume. I think perhaps she even guessed my discomfort, for she began to chatter to make me feel more at ease. And whether it was because I was genuinely young, or whether it was because as Dora said afterward, I looked like a "cute, quaint little thing," anyhow when we did meet the two men who were to take us to dinner they did not laugh at me. Instead, the older and stouter of the two smiled encouragingly as he held out his hand. "Dora has told us about you" he said. "She says you've never been out to dinner before like this. We'll have to show you a good time."

I murmured something incoherent. The four of us went to the restaurant of the hotel in which we had met. For a while I was too overcome to speak. All about me were girls and women as exquisitely dressed as Dora. Some of them in far gayer and more glittering colors. I seemed to myself to be the only grab in this garden of butterflies. And, too, to add to my discomfort, I scarcely knew which of the shining forks and spoons it was correct to use. My glance continually sought Dora, and the two men with whom we were, to guide my own actions by theirs.

Although I had not caught the names of our escorts at first, I now learned that they were officially Mr. White and Mr. Fellowes. Mr. White was all attention to Dora. She called him "Billy Boy" and he called her "baby" or "kid". Quite frankly she took the jewel from her hand and showed it to Mr. Fellowes, asking him if "Billy Boy" was not "a perfect ducky-daddy" for having given it to her. Mr. Fellowes declared he was going to call me "Cinderella" for reasons that I could fathom and that did not add anything to my sense of self-reliance. And he insisted that I call him "Freddie." I looked at him and could not do it. He was fully fifty years old and gray and portly. I could not bring my lips to form the skittish name.

And here, too, the normal impulses of a healthy girl came to my aid in what might have been my first temptation. As a very much older friend I might even have liked him, for he was not unpleasant. He was good-natured. Apparently he meant to be kind to me. But as a suitor, and as my equal in youth and in the love game, my every instinct rose up in arms against him. Certainly, after Dora had asked me to her dinner party, and this man was doing all he could to entertain me, I did not wish to be rude or abrupt. But "Freddie," I could not call him that. And his languishing glances I could not meet. Although in response to the teasing of the other three I even had sipped my first glass of champagne. The wine only made me feel hot and a little dizzy. My cheeks were flushed, but my impulses were not.

At last, as my hand lay beside my plate fiddling with a bit of roll, Mr. Fellowes evidently thought it was time to make more definite advances. His fingers closed over mine.

"That's a pretty, cute little hand" he said. "Some day it ought to have a ring on it like Dora's. Don't you think so?" he asked of the others.

But I snatched my hand away

Good home made bread is the most palatable, wholesome and nourishing food in the world. It is far more economical than any other staple food. If people would eat less meat and other heavy foods they would feel better and help to keep down the cost of living. Bread made in the home with Royal Yeast Cakes is more nourishing and appetizing than any other. Nothing healthier for children and grown ups.

ROYAL YEAST CAKES

A fresh, rosy complexion indicates perfect health. To secure this in most cases all that is necessary is to take one to three Royal Yeast Cakes a day for a few weeks.

Yeast is a food. It supplies the water soluble vitamins which the diet may lack. Scientists tell us that this vitamin is essential to good health. Yeast is highly beneficial in many cases in which the system seems to be run down. The yeast cakes simply add to the diet.

Dissolve a Royal Yeast Cake in fruit juices or mix it with cereal and milk, and take it at meal time. The chances are in a few weeks the complexion will be clear. Constipation and other ills will be relieved. For children reduce the amount to one-half or one-quarter of a cake with each meal.

PSYCHOLOGY BASIS OF DISEASE THEORY. Body Not Mere Machine, Harvard Professor Tells Allies.

BOSTON, June 9.—Medical science has placed too much stress on the mechanical theory of disease and must recognize that functional disorders have a place equally important to that of organic disorders, Prof. William MacDougall, Harvard University psychologist, said in addressing the American Psychiatric Association last night.

"I believe the mind has a nature and a structure and functions of its own, which cannot be described fully and adequately in terms of structure of the brain and its psychological processes. And if that be true, it does not seem logically impossible that this nature of the mind itself may be disordered or impaired or defective.

"If we are to make satisfactory progress in psychological medicine," said Professor MacDougall, "we still need, it seems to me, to recognize fully and frankly the claim of functional disorder to a place of equal importance and reality with the organic or structural disorders. That recognition can come only from a revision of the conception of organisms as pure mechanisms or machines, a concept that has dominated the biological and medical sciences, and even psychological science, more than half a century. It is through mental influences that functional disorders are brought about."
