GLORIOUS DEEDS OF "SCRAPPED" SHIP

There have been innumerable romances in the world war, both on land and on sea. No the least of the latter is the romance of H. M. S. Sirius, the only third-class cruiser of 6,300 tons in the good old-fashioned days of 1891. The story of H. M. S. Sirius is a story of rescue. It is not the story of human lives heroically rescued under the dangers of fire, but the rescue of an old ship from the scrap heap of oblivion to a new life of imperishable glory. The old Sirius had long been advertised for sale. But, somehow or other, there seemed to be no buyers of antiquities, and the Sirius remained at Chatham without a purchaser. But a month or so ago the Sirius, with a small crew, was sent on a lazy journey to Portsmouth. Suddenly, in the middle of that lazy journey, there came a wireless message ordering the crew to prepare for active service.

Silenced Foos Batteries

The old ship awakened to a new life and six days after hoisting her pennant she was in the midst of a tremendous bombardment off her guns worked splendidly; her crew, the members of which hardly knew each other by sight, worked like heroes, and before long the old Sirius silenced a couple of German batteries. Other batteries opened fire, but the Sirius went at them and silenced them. In one single day the brave old ship had fired as many as 1,510 rounds of shrapnel and lyddite from her heavy guns.

Old Ship's Swift Turns

But the old ship was manoeuvred with all the swiftness of youth, and somehow or other their shells either dropped short or missed their mark. One or two whistled overhead, and only the splinters of a couple of shrapnel shots did any damage. These escaped the starboard bow lightly and did the minimum of damage, whereas bits of paint, white one bit of shrapnel passed through the Union Jack flying at the foremast. Then, having done a good days work, the Sirius put in at a certain dock and replenished herself with ammunition and provisions.

"Calls" Enemy Remembered

She spent two hours in paying these little calls of respect to various German batteries. Afterwards she was informed by officers of the Royal Flying Corps who had been watching the exchange of compliments from her ship's guns had destroyed a German convoy as it approached a coast base and had smashed up a number of the German launches.

IMMENSE DEMAND FOR CANADIAN HORSES

OTTAWA, Feb. 2.—The great demand from Great Britain, France, Belgium and Italy for Canadian cavalry and artillery horses will, according to the Department of Agriculture here, practically absorb all the available supplies of light horses in Canada during the coming year. High prices for horses of nearly all kinds, with the possible exception of heavy draft horses, are predicted in Canada for years to come. Already some thirty thousand horses have been purchased in Canada for war purposes. The British War Office has purchased in Canada more than seven thousand out of the fifty thousand horses secured on this side of the Atlantic since the outbreak of the war. The Canadian Government purchased about seven thousand horses for the first contingent and another ten thousand are now being bought for the second and third contingents. The French and Italian Governments are also looking for horses in Canada. A Toronto firm was recently offered a contract for five thousand horses to be purchased for the Italian Government. The demand for horses for army purposes is increasing. It is estimated that the total number of horses now engaged in the war is one million. The estimated average life of the cavalry horse on active service is seven days; of the artillery horse it is thirty days. For army purposes in the next twelve months, therefore, more than twelve million horses will be required.

Estimated Available Supply Here

An estimate prepared by the Department of Agriculture of the available supply in Canada shows that there are about forty-six thousand horses suitable for cavalry or artillery purposes. Of these two thousand are in the Maritime Provinces, eight thousand in Quebec, twelve thousand in Ontario, four thousand in Manitoba, seven thousand in Alberta, and one thousand in British Columbia. A conservative estimate places the total number of horses owned by the allies at forty-eight millions, and by the enemy at 8,700,000. Of these, of course, only a small proportion would be available for war purposes. The supply in Germany and Austria is already pretty well exhausted, and those countries have not the resources of the United States and other neutral countries to draw upon.

May Become Great Luxury

It is probable that before the year closes the farmer of Canada will have sold for war purposes six or seven million dollars' worth of horses. When the war closes a good driving or riding horse may be as great a luxury as a good automobile.

HONEY CONSUMPTION.

Discussion by Bookkeepers at the Chicago Convention.

Seemingly one of the most important subjects discussed at the recent convention of bee keepers held in Chicago and representing districts in Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa had to do with the matter of creating a greater demand for honey. More than this, it is important to find a market to make up for some falling off in the demand of other years. For instance, it was shown that where last year a big national baking concern was making use of 125 carloads of honey the same concern used but 15 this year, and this was honey that had cost but three and a half cents a pound.

The falling off is explained on the theory that the honey-sweetened cakes capable of being carried through ovens are much less in demand, the general consumer seems to have tired of that particular kind. The bee keepers are trying to increase the membership of their association to organize a working machine that will originate some plan by which the general public will be educated into the desirability of honey as a food. It isn't enough to paste a sticker bearing the suggestion, "Eat honey," on the mail matter of bee men. It is more desirable to map out a propaganda, that, wide spread, will demonstrate in how many different ways honey may be used in the average household, not only as a healthful food, but as an economic move in the way of reducing the cost of living.

The chief reason why such a movement has never been started, so it is related, is that there has been no money with which to do it. It requires funds to originate and carry out such an enterprise. But a letter written by an authority and read to the convention, suggested that if every bee keeper would contribute the price of a half pound of honey a great stride would be taken in the right direction. Secretary Danduff said that not more than one per cent. of the bee keepers in the district represented by the convention belonged to the association. He said, however, that membership is increasing and that, considering the poor crop that had been produced in the last honeyflow season, the Chicago convention was a good one. There was an unusually great amount of interest in the short programme embraced the greatest number of important subjects that probably ever has been arranged for such a meeting.

It discussed American bee keeping, past and future, and it was shown that some very portentous events had taken place. Shipping bees to distant bloom fields, country wide advertising, bee cellars by the use of which it is hoped to save a loss of from 20 to 30 per cent. in wintering outside, the high price of sugar, diseases, stimulative feeding, bee keeping as a business, were discussed intelligently. One of the greatest accomplishments among apiarists is the perfect control of non-warming bees under the high tension of honey production. The novice in bee keeping was given some hard knocks. He is a man who would be careful to keep disease out of his colonies, the result of which is state wide extermination and loss. It was pointed out that one of the sates has a law that has been enforced so well that the whole state is well high rid of foul brood.

Mr. Aspinwall, of Michigan, urged the bee keepers to give their whole time to their apiculture once they went into the business for profit. It couldn't well be divided with any other business unless it was the business of producing bloom. There was a division of opinion as to the extent of which bees work in the bloom of alfalfa. It is contended that only the plant produced in irrigated soil, or particular kinds of soil, is attractive to bees, but Secretary Danduff explained that in hundreds of instances of alfalfa being raised chiefly for roughage, it is cut before blooming and is therefore not available for use as a source of nearly all kinds. One entire evening was given over to a paper on the growing of white and red clover, this subject being handled by Prof. Mosier of the University of Illinois, who urged increased planting and culture of this effective forage plant.—Michigan Farmer.
