At this stage and he did not indicate that his party planned to do so later. However, he too, mentioned a solution should be sought not in a convertibility of currency but on a convertibility-of-goods basis.

(Under House rules only an amendment and a sub-amendment may be considered at the same time. After the C.C.F. sub-amendment is voted on the Social Credit party then may introduce a motion.)

The debate on the budget, main features of which were introduced last March 22, was adjourned by trade problems and suggestions of the opposition parties were heard in their speeches varied and at times where were fewer than 100 members in their seats.

At one point when Mr. Rowe was charging that Government trade policies were allowing huge surpluses of goods to build up in Canada, Trade Minister Howe dozed quietly in his chair.

Commonwealth Conference

Mr. Rowe said Government policies have virtually lost Canada's traditional markets and he called for a Commonwealth trade conference to cope with the situation.

He described the reintroduced budget as "shockingly obsolete" in the face of world conditions that had sharply altered since it first was presented last spring.

Since March there had been broad currency devaluation, with Canada devaluing 10 per cent while the United Kingdom and other countries devalued 30 per cent.

He said Canada's decision to join the sterling area, almost negligible in its approach to government of being apathetic, almost negligent in its approach to the development of natural resources to help meet the "staggering" fixed cost of government.

He urged immediate inauguration of a "government-wide saving policy" without creating undue hardship or hindering the economic development of this country.

He said a national development program should be launched in co-operation with the Provinces to assure the ability of Canada to sustain social security policies, price support programs and other fixed charges as well as to ensure defence preparedness.

Mr. Thatcher accused the government of being apathetic, almost negligent in its approach to the development of natural resources to help meet the "staggering" fixed cost of government.

The C.C.F. party advocated "an immediate substantial downward revision of tariffs on British Commonwealth goods and on goods from the sterling areas to allow those nations to earn Canadian dollars to buy our goods and to help lower the cost-of-living of the Canadian people."
