

A WOMAN OF PARIS

featuring Edna Purviance

Written and Directed by

CHARLES CHAPLIN

"You Wouldn't Understand"

said the erstwhile village girl whom Fate has turned into a woman of Paris when the richest bachelor in the world's gayest city pointed to her glittering gems, asking, "What more do you want? You have everything."

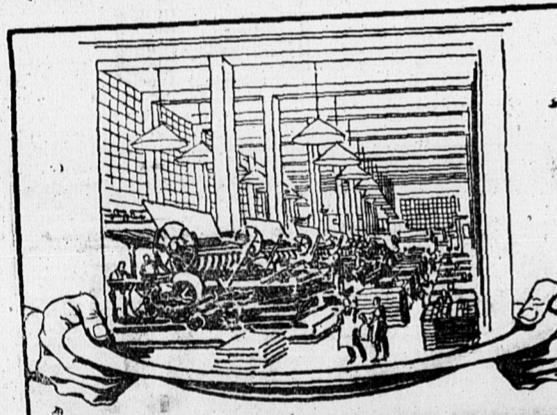

She Had Butterfly Luxury

but all the while her woman's heart craved real love with the man of whom Fate had robbed her, a real home, her man's children. For these she was willing to give all—her gorgeous gowns and gleaming jewels.

IN MEMORIAM

PAUL L. CAMPBELL

Fortified by the rites of the Holy Catholic Church of which he was a consistent member there passed peacefully away on the morning of August 4th at East Baltic, Paul L. Campbell at the advanced age of 81 years.

The deceased, a son of the late Peter Campbell, was born at North Lake, and like many other young men of that time spent some years of his early life fishing in the port of Gloucester, Mass. About forty years ago he bought a property at Fortune Bridge, where he successfully conducted a mercantile business for a number of years, later removing to East Baltic where he resided with his family until his death.

The late Mr. Campbell was a man of stern, upright honesty in all his dealings, with his fellow men, strict honesty was one of his chief characteristics, and in his life was fully exemplified the expression that "an honest man is the noblest work of God."

The deceased was married to Sarah Gallant of New Acadia by whom he had a family of six sons and one daughter. In early life he was stricken with a severe attack of brain fever from the effects of which he became incurably deaf, and for upwards of sixty years he lived in a silent world without ever hearing the sound of his busy over motion, not even the voice of his loving wife or affectionate children could penetrate the silence of his surroundings, yet he was never heard to murmur or complain against his sad affliction; he bore it with patience and resignation, and let us hope that after he had entered the portals of death that the first sound to pierce his silent ears was the voice of his merciful Saviour bidding him enter into the joys of the Lord.

He is survived by a sorrowful wife and five sons, viz.—John in Los Angeles, Calif., Howard in York, U. S., Peter, Arthur and William, at home. The funeral to St. Alexis' cemetery, Rollo Bay was largely attended, where the remains of a good man were laid to rest beside two of his children who had predeceased him some time, there to await the final resurrection.

Son and Former Butler.

The drummer was La Goulue's son. The third and remaining member of the company was a stone-dead old man who played the cornet.

—this was La Goulue's former butler. When the tent was full, La Goulue would step into the cage, and, unbuckling her ancient dress at the left shoulder, would show where one of her former lions had torn her flesh. Then she would prowl the old lion until it would growl and run around. That was the entire show. The war was the last straw. It became impossible to feed the lion and it had to be killed.

La Goulue's son was conscripted and was captured by the Germans. La Goulue descended to peddling candy on the boulevards. A few months ago she changed to vegetables, in the apache-like Rue Leprieux and early morning roysters often see the former queen of Montmartre pushing a barrow on her way to the markets.

Crown Prince Comedy

(By Dominion News Service.)

LONDON, Aug. 13.—"Have you seen the Crown Prince of Germany?"

Villagers for miles around Bourne-mouth have been asking each other this question in awe-struck tones recently. Scores of people have seen him.

"They are all so convinced that 'little Willie' has smuggled himself into England that a special Home Office investigation has been held.

The first suspicious circumstance was the manner of the arrival of the "Crown Prince." He crossed from Holland, but not by the ordinary route; he took a passage in an ocean-going liner and landed at Southampton with his wife and two children.

As soon as they arrived at the hotel, the staff thought he was "little Willie," and his luggage and personal belongings were stamped with a crown, which was a suspicious circumstance. Then a visitor in waiting to British royalty, was struck by the family likeness of the man to the Crown Prince.

By this time the alarm was general. The facts were reported to Scotland Yard, but before any official action was taken the most dramatic development of all occurred.

Another visitor to the hotel found the foreigner alone in a room with five large maps opened in front of him. He was studying them close-four-winged insect resembling a dragon fly—strikes a circle in the sand by using its body as a kind of ploughshare, after which it proceeds to remove the sand within the boundary by turning its head into a shovel, as it were. The sand is pushed on to the back of the flattened head with one leg, and then shot away with a sudden jerk. Proceeding thus, in ever narrowing and deepening circles, the ant lion at length produces a pit of the shape of an inverted cone.

Any insect which reaches the edge of the pit is doomed, for the dry sand crumbles away beneath its feet and it slips to the bottom, where the lion ant is for ever on the alert.

Should the victim attempt to ascend the treacherous slope, a volley of sand comes hurtling upon it from the shovelhead below, and it is quickly brought down.

Sand-Bagger At The Zoo

(By Dominion News Service.)

LONDON, Aug. 13.—An arch trickster, in the form of a pit-making ant lion, has just been added to the collection in the insect house of the zoological gardens here.

The newcomer has already fashioned the conical sand-pit characteristic of his species, but all that the plump little excavator shows of himself is his pair of mandibles protruding from the sand at the bottom.

It was with much method and cleverness that the pit was constructed. First of all, the ant lion—which is really the larva of a

What's in a Name?

TIMES have changed since the Bard of Avon put his famous query, "What's in a name?" In Shakespeare's day the most successful merchant was the biggest skinfint. His name meant nothing. You entered his shop with your eyes open and your fingers crossed. You haggled and you bargained. And if you were especially astute, perhaps you retained your eye teeth.

Modern business ideals and modern advertising have wrought the change. To-day, the biggest asset of any successful business is a good name built up through fair dealing, fair policies and a good product.

Advertising creates reputation. Makers of advertised products and the merchants who sell these products frequently value the names at millions of dollars. They cannot afford to jeopardize the worth of these names by selling anything but good merchandise of full measure and fair price.

A merchant or manufacturer does not dare to advertise wares that will not give service. He has his good name to protect.

Bank on this. Advertised goods must be as advertised. That's why it pays you to deal with advertisers and to buy advertised goods.

Advertising is your protection Read it
