Canada Plans New Legations

OTTAWA, July 12 — (CP) — Prime Minister Mackenzie King said in the House of Commons tonight that Canada could not long delay further extension of diplomatic representation in Latin America and he hoped legations in Cuba and Peru soon would be opened.

"Footlight Serenade" Yeo Theatre Montague And Souris

Betty Grable, John Payne and Victor Mature are starred in 20th Century-Fox's new musical, "Footlight Serenade," coming to the Yeo Theatre which is hailed as the "perfect tonic for the times." Featuring love, laughs and lyrics, it is indeed a merry musical treat.

With a story that spells entertainment all the way, "Footlight Serenade" tells of a fighter who turns actor. Victor Mature realistically portrays the boxer, as John Payne can testify — while both boys are "nuts" about curvaceous Betty Grable, as who isn't!

Rated by previewers as a worthy successor to "My Gal Sal," the picture is studded with topflight talent, such as Jane Wyman, James Gleason, Phil Silvers and Cabina Wright, Jr. Produced with all the embellishments that mark a top-flight musical, "Footlight Serenade" has been hailed as one of the best.

Unemployment Insurance Stricly Adherred

Mr. John B. Murley, manager of the local Employment Office, today stated that a change in policy has been adopted by the Unemployment Insurance Commission in regard to the exchange of unemployment insurance books required by law to be made at April 1st. Up to this year, Mr. Murley stated, in order to give employers an opportunity of becoming familiar with the Act, prosecutions were not entered against employers who delayed unreasonably or failed to exchange the insurance books of their employees. However, this year prosecutions are being gone ahead with, and already six convictions of delinquent employers are reported from various points across Canada. Employers charged with negligence at Waterford, N.S., Shediac, N.B., Toronto and Sudbury, Ont., and Chicoutimi and Sherbrooke, P.Q., have all been convicted by local magistrates. The magistrates levied minimum fines in some cases, but in other instances penalties were rather severe: several magistrates issued warnings that further offenses would be treated more seriously.

Mr. Murley added that he is informed from Ottawa that a number of additional cases across Canada, where failure to exchange insurance books is alleged, are now under review, and some of them at least will come before the courts.

The Local Employment Office Manager stated that in this district there are some employers who have not yet complied with the requirements of the Unemployment Insurance Act in regard to the exchange of books.

CHAPTER XII

Ramon Garrison went to speak to the terrified Mexican, and the excited flow of crude vaquero Spanish carried over the sudden hush in the rumpus room of the Hacienda. One of the men in the village, Jose, was on a rampage, following a drinking bout. In the fracas one man had been knifed, and now everyone in the little adobe village was panic-stricken.

Just a light in the village," Ramon said, coming back to the tense listeners. "I told the man to get Pete Saba and the other foremen to take care of Jose. Too bad Clint Hanlon is away, or he would handle this fellow easily. Pete will probably have to take a gun."

Tracy knew that was the wrong way to handle the trouble and Ruth, too, shook her dark head.

"That won't work, Ramon," Ruth told her father. "The Senora gave strict orders for no one to take a gun into the village if there shoud be trouble."

Ramon looked uneasily about, as if seeking advice from the others. Tracy pitied him then, for his weakness. As the eldest male Garrison, it was his duty to go to the village.

Tracy said, "Maybe I could go and talk to Jose. Those people understand me."

Juan Garrison said, his voice for once free of mockery ,"Don't talk nonsense, Tracy. If that wild Jose has a gun he's likely to shoot before he realizes who you are."

It was Helene's smooth voice that said, "Why not let Phil go? After all, the Senora has been telling us that he is a real Garrison—a second Jeff Garrison." She put aside her magazine and walked half across the room to the man. "Aren't you going to live up to the Senora Maria's build-up, Phil?"

Tracy said, "Now that is nonsense! Phil doesn't know anything about the villagers."

But she saw no one was paying any attention to her, not even Jim Pete Donohue, Ruth, Ramon and Juan were all looking expectantly at Jim, along with Helene who was so obviously baiting him. Tracy was surprised to find him unembarrassed now. His eyes were narrow, bright. He smiled steadily at Helene.

He said, "Naturally I'll tackle the Mexican, Helene — if your husband will accompany me."

Tracy silently applauded that retort. She say Helene shrug. There was a lengthy moment of silence, then the coming of the foreman Pete Saba, a leathery-faced old cowhand, was a distraction. Looking uneasily about, his eyes sought Ramon's frowning face.

"You know how it is, sir," said Old Pete. "I can take the boys with me and go to the village. We can tackle Jose. But the others will throw in with Jose — against us. Then there'll be real trouble."

Tracy understood that Old Pete wasn't refusing to go; he was merely outlining what would happen so that the responsibility would rest on Ramon. She looked at Ramon. His face sagged with weakness. A mocking smile twisted his daughter's lips.

Then Tracy looked at Jim. And she was startled. He was smiling in a thin-lipped way; his eyes had the strange, bright look of a cowboy about to tackle a killer horse at a rodeo. Helene was looking at Conroy, too — a challenge in her gold-flecked eyes.

It was Conroy who broke the strained silence, but Tracy didn't recognize his voice. It was unlike a Garrison voice—low and chill, with the sharpness of steel in it.

"That brings us back to where we were before Pete came in," he said. "I'll talk to Jose if you will go with me, Ramon."

"This isn't our job, Phil," said Ramon. "We better let things go as they are. Clint Hanlon can handle it in the morning."

Old Pete snapped, his voice rough: "Jose can do a lot of damage before morning. If you want somebody to go with you, sir—" he looked at the newcomer to Garrison Ranch now, ignoring everyone else,"I'll go with you."

There was another brief silence. Tracy watched the two men. Pete Saba took this as part of his job. Jim took it as a challenge. Tracy had the panicky thought: "There is danger—I can't let him go!" The next instant she knew that she could — and would. The Senora Maria would want him to go.

He moved across the room, and said, "All right, Pete." And they went out into the night together. Tracy stood rigid, frightened. She heard Juan say, "What's the idea, Helene, baiting him like that?"

Helene turned and gave Juan a rather uncertain smile. Her eyes seemed a little scared. Tracy stood trance-like for a moment longer, a pressure of alarm building up in her, then went out into the patio. She heard Juan call to her to come back, but it was Helene's voice that halted her. She seemed unnerved, and her face was white with a sudden pallor in the moonlight.

"I'm sorry, Tracy," Helene said. "I shouldn't have done that. If anything happens, I'll be to blame. But when I discovered his masquerade it seemed like an awfully amusing gag to show him up. I never thought he would do it, since it's not his responsibility."

Helene poured out the words breathlessly. Staring at her, Tracy demanded:

"Masquerade? What do you mean by that?"

"Don't keep up the pretense with me, Tracy. I know what you are trying to do. You brought this man here and had him pose as Phil Garrison to help Senora Maria make Ramon and Juan and Ruth —and me, too, toe the line. It would have worked, too, if I had not met the real Phil Garrison two years ago."

Tracy's mind reeled under the impact of that blow. She groped through the alarming significance of what Helene said, trying to find something to prove Helene was telling an untruth. Yet she knew clearly that this was no lie.

She said shakenly, "You mean — he is not Phil Garrison?"

Helene was recovering her poise. She laughed a little. "Don't pretend innocence, Tracy. You knew all the while!"

"I didn't know!" Tracy spoke half to Helene, half to herself. And she asked: "Then who is he — who is this man?"

IN MEMORIAM

EDITH ELIZABETH MacLEOD

A wide circle of friends will regret to learn of the passing on of Miss Edith Elizabeth McLeod whose death occurred in Vancouver, B.C., on June 26th, 1943, while on an extended vacation trip to her brother James.

The late Miss MacLeod was the daughter of the late Deacon William McLeod, and Sarah Gunn McLeod of Bridgetown, where she was born and educated.

During World War 1 she served as a Nursing Sister in England, and France where she performed her arduous duties with such credit as to be commended by her superior officers. At the close of hostilities she travelled extensively abroad. Returning home to the tasks of civilian life she was for a number of years in the employ of the late Robert N. McNeill, K. C., in the care and upbringing of his young daughter. In later years she devoted her entire time to the care and companionship of her late father.

During her lengthy illness she was fortified by her lively faith in the Christian religion, being a loyal member of the Dundas Baptist Church.

There are left to cherish the memory of a loving sister, Miss Margaret MacLeod, R.N., Bridgetown, P.E.I., Miss Minna McLeod, R.N., Cambridge, Mass., Miss Sadie McLeod, Dedham, Mass., Norman W. MacLeod, Bridgetown, P.E.I., James F. Vancouver, B.C., Samuel who predeceased her, Committal services were conducted from the Fairview Baptist church Interment was in Ocean View Park cemetery, Vancouver, B.C.

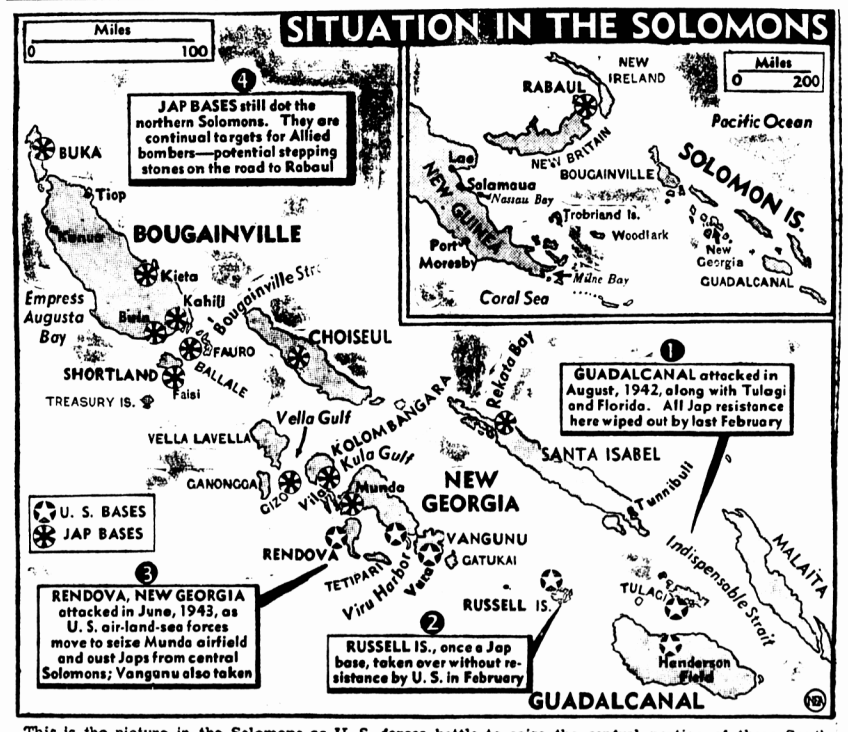
WASHINGTON, July 12—(AP)—In a smashing attack on four Japanese cargo ships stealing through the north Pacific fog toward the isolated enemy garrison at Kiska, United States bombers have sunk one of the vessels, left a second in a sinking condition and damaged the other two, the navy department revealed today. The ships presumably were bearing supplies to Kiska.



This is the picture in the Solomons as U S. forces battle to seize the central portion of those South Pacific islands from the Japs. Current campaign is third in a parade of actions that may culminate in attack on the enemy's northern Solomons base at Bougainville.
