Use Your Head Age No Hindrance To Golf

MEDFORD, Ore., Oct. 14.—Business men, whose once-a-week straggle on the golf course often brings about a dour disposition instead of the eagerly sought lower score, can take heart from a page of the colorful links story of H. Chandler Egan, Medford peer grower.

Champion 22 Years Ago

Twenty-two years ago, Egan waded through the pick of the country to win the national championship. This feat was accomplished at Baltusrol, the difficult course where George Von Elm of Los Angeles conquered Bobby Jones this year for the identical title.

Where Youth a Handicap

To accomplish what seems to many a hopeless task, Egan has this formula: "Use your head." After three times he went on to say: "The youngsters who compete in championships almost invariably use a hook shot. No question but what that will get them the maximum distance. But it is not half as reliable for the average golfer as the faded shot. This is but one instance where head-work would enable young golfers who have all the requisites of champions to reach their objectives.

Old School Hardest

"Twenty-five years ago we had only a creek, midiron and mashie. The intermediate shots had to be made by the player's own ingenuity in changing stance and stroke. This was a hard school, but I believe it had the compensation of developing more thorough shot-makers than the general run today."
