THE MORNING GUARDIAN

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1903.

THE BOUNDARY COMMISSION.

There is one point in regard to the Commission proposed to be appointed for the settlement of the Alaskan boundary which has not so far received the attention in Canadian newspapers which its importance demands. It is not to six arbitrators of the common sort to whom the questions in difference are to be referred. It is required that the Commissioners shall be jurists of eminence, who will endeavor to ascertain the true intent and meaning of the Anglo-Russian treaty of 1825 by which the boundary between British and Russian America was then defined. The United States can justly claim no more than Russia had in Alaska, her rights being acquired by the purchase of Russian America.

It will be seen at a glance that six jurists of eminence having the Anglo-Russian treaty before them, and probably some official maps of the territory, of the same or approximate date with the treaty, will be in a position to treat the matter judicially. Such men, having been accustomed to examine and interpret agreements and treaties, and having a reputation as jurists to maintain it, it is to be hoped will honestly endeavor to find out the true intent and meaning of the treaty in question. It may be that their finding will be in our favor, or against the Canadian contention, or that the Commission, if entrusted with the work, may be unable to agree. The treaty may be found to leave the true boundary in doubt. So long ago as 1825 neither Britain nor Russia attached much value to that far northern territory. But we fail to find any more just or equitable method of settlement than that now proposed, and we are not without hope that the labors of the Commission may result in strengthening the Canadian claim to the territory in dispute.

THE EXAMINER'S QUESTION.

The esteemed Examiner hands over to this journal for answer a question which it has compiled from a long letter of one of the Examiner's correspondents. The question is as follows:

"If, as The Guardian maintains, liquor was as great a curse to the Israelites as it is to us, why was not the use of wine, etc. forbidden neither by the law of Moses nor of Christ?"

We repeat the question mainly in order to point out an obvious untruth in it and to correct some other erroneous impressions. The Guardian never maintained that liquor was as great a curse to the Israelites as it is to us. We did not maintain that drunkenness was a prevalent vice in Palestine in the days of the prophets and apostles. But the people of those days had none of the stronger drinks that are in use in the civilized countries of today—no whiskey, brandy, rum, gin, absinthe—and consequently the drunkenness of the time was caused almost wholly by wines of various strength and intoxicating power. It would hardly be expected that the use of liquors not then known would be condemned by name. But on general principles we conclude that such passages as "Look not upon the wine," "Be not among wine bibbers," "It is not for kings to drink wine nor princes strong drink," together with the prohibition against priests taking wine when they were to enter the sanctuary, have an equal application as against the more intoxicating liquors of to-day.

There are other questions of vital consequence upon which one or all of the Scripture writers were much more silent than in regard to the drinking usages. It might puzzle the Examiner's questioner to find in either the writings of Moses or of our Savior any direct prohibition of human slavery, of polygamy or of gambling, but inferentially and by the moral principles it lays down the Bible condemns all these notorious evils and the laws of our land prohibit them. We do not think any one possessed of intelligence and morality in this community and because of the seeming silence or ambiguity of the sacred writings, or the lack of specific prohibitions there of slavery, polygamy or gambling, will deny the right for a Christian Legislature to prohibit those evils. And if the right to legislate against those evils be conceded the right to legislate against the equally great evil of the drink traffic can hardly be denied.

At a recent meeting of the Ontario Press Association a letter was read from Sir Sanford Fleming pointing out that so far not a single press message had come over the Pacific cable since its opening. Sir Sanford recommends the Cable Company to transmit 500 words of Canadian and Australian news daily free of charge for three months with a view to satisfying news service which would create a demand and place itself afterward on a regular basis.

So far as our recollection goes, in listening to the deliverances of the higher courts of several Provinces from time to time, it has been the almost invariable practice in reviewing the proceedings of lower courts for the Judges to treat the latter with respect and consideration. And there is an obviously good reason for this. The administration of civil and criminal justice in Canada is all of a piece from top to bottom, although the duties are divided between courts of higher and lower grades and of greater or less power and responsibility. The plain Justice of the Peace or the Stipendiary Magistrate may discharge the official duties of his position as faithfully, efficiently and with the same high regard for justice and right as the Chief Justice of Canada, and in doing so is entitled to the respect of all. It was therefore with mild surprise that we listened to some remarks of the Master of the Rolls in a recent judgment which reflected upon Stipendiary Magistrates' courts as liable to seek the applause of the public or to be moved by popular clamor.
