CHAPTER XXIV

"Well, little Spittire, what did Navratil tell you?" T. Q. took Billy's arm and led her into the dining room.

Her purpose to tell him the bitter truth and run away held firm. She raised her blue eyes drowned in tears and faced him honestly with Navratil's verdict.

"So you see," she concluded, her lips quivering like a heartbroken child's, "you'd better give my year to someone else. A year won't be enough. It's not fair to take it, when I know that I can't prepare myself for my career as you expect me to—"

"Can't I be the judge of that?" T. Q. laid both long, bony hands on her shoulders.

"But Navratil knows—" she wailed, but the panic which had swamped upon her so suddenly was evaporating.

T. Q. grinned at her fondly, tightened his hands upon her shoulders. "Navratil called me on the phone at the store, just after you'd left. He said he realized that he had discouraged and bewildered you. He had thought you would understand that he was speaking to you as one artist to another, not as a teacher to an ordinary violin pupil. What he meant was that it would take three or five years to make you ready to take your place as one of the great violinists of America."

"Oh!" Billy breathed a sharp cry of joy. "He thinks I will be really great—some day? He criticized me so dreadfully, made me want never to touch my violin again. But I have only a year." "But think what that year can do for you, child." He shook her slightly, affectionately. "This doesn't sound at all like my little Spittire! Navratil says by the end of the year you can easily make your living, and a very good living, too, with your fiddle. Does it sound so terrible now? If you get your start this year, with Navratil, you can carry on your studies while you earn a good living. You'll stick, won't you, little Spittire? And trust old T. Q. to know what's best for you?"

For answer, Billy laid her cheek against the hand that gripped her left shoulder. It was the slightest of caresses, but it was the first mark of affection she had ever shown him, and he looked extraordinarily pleased—until Dalhart Romaine entered the dining room, his aunt's hand on his arm, his grave, brown, still face bent deferentially toward Mrs. Meadows.

"This is most unconventional, our luncheon in evening dress," Mrs. Meadows said, as Romaine held her chair for her. "But I knew you were eager to get back to business, Mr. Curtis."

"I'm afraid we'll snap our fingers at the book of etiquette a good many times, Mrs. Meadows," T. Q. told her sharply, his eyes darting a glance of badly concealed dislike at Romaine, who took his place between his aunt and Billy Wells.

Billy wondered, catching that look, just why T. Q. disliked Dal Romaine so intensely. Ralph Truman looked at Romaine with just such a hostile tightening of lips and jaw. Wasn't their dislike founded on the fact that Romaine was arrestingly handsome, that he had leisure and knew how to use it beautifully, that women were irresistibly attracted to him?

"He makes other men seem crude and commercial and a little ridiculous—all except T. Q.'s who's a gleam of a gleam of manly romantic as roast beef," she mused, even as the close proximity of Dal Romaine miraculously lighted with that fleet business, Winnie Shelton! Nyda's smile of his, which left it more broodingly grave and mysterious than before. At the moment she probed his smile because it had tested, in her cool, modulated voice, while Dal Romaine's lips twitched with a tiny, secret smile.

Winnie laughed, exultant that it was her triumph. "But her trip with Romaine had not been spoiled by either Nyda's or Billy's unwelcome presence. "Oh suspicion from Nyda's glittering I was so thrilled this morning, Mr. black eyes. "Miss Shelton is very Curtis, when I got my shorthand keen to learn ice-skating and I've volunteered to teach her. I hope all three of you girls will be my shiniest, darlings! typewriter with a little bell that tinkles at the end of every line. I know a whole line of the keyboard a ready—Q-W. He turned toward Mr. Curtis with a charming, disarming smile. "A pretty little shaft built on the edge of the river. An orchestra is to play this afternoon to make the skating merrier. The ice is quite safe, I'm assured. Will you go, Miss Wells—and Miss Lomax?"

"I've got to practice hours and hours," Billy could not keep a note of keen disappointment out of her voice.

"So sorry. Another time, perhaps? And you, Miss Lomax?"

"I have another engagement," Nyda acknowledged sullenly. "If I'd known—Winnie, you're a deceitful little brute. You told me you were going to study this afternoon."

"But I'm sure you'd much rather be with Eddie Banning. That's your date, isn't it?" Winnie asked innocently.

maine made her quiver and ache with desire for the stimulus of his to brush them accidentally as he went cold and rigid with the pain of waiting, so that she dropped the tiny dish of salt. His lean brown fingers did brush hers then, as they scooped the spilled crystals from the cloth, and instantly she had the feeling that she had been given a dose of some powerful drug.

Better fling some of that salt over your left shoulder, Billy, or you'll have bad luck," Winnie Shelton suggested sweetly, but her eyes were furious. She had seen the touch of Romaine's hands, "Oh, Dal—I mean Mr. Romaine, Winnie flattered, you haven't forgotten what you promised—for this afternoon?" Her coaxing voice hinted at lovely secrets.

Romaine's grave, still face was max's cheeks and burned in her narrowed eyes. "I'm going to the Princess Shoppe for a fitting," she snapped.

T. Q. chuckled. "I've meant to tell you girls that you are at liberty to bring any of your old friends to the house. Banning is the young chap who squired you at the anniversary party, isn't he, Nyda?"

"Eddie Banning is nothing to me," Nyda's fingers trembled as she raised a fork of creamed chicken to her sullen mouth. "I haven't noticed Clyde, Stewart around here yet, Winnie," she added maliciously.

"Clyde?" Winnie's eyes were very wide and innocent. "Why, Clyde Stewart and I were just friends, thrown together at the store, but I thought you and Eddie were engaged."

Blount School, Nyda? All signed up?

"Oh, yes," Nyda gave him a long, deep, glowing look. "I've got to study three different lessons tonight. I'll be so glad when I've learned enough to be allowed to teach in the model kindergarten. I'm just crazy to be with the kiddies."

T. Q. beamed upon her almost fatuously, it seemed to Billy. Wasn't he clever enough to know that she was "stringing him"—Nyda who detested children?

"Mrs. Meadows and I are planning a big surprise for you, my dear. No, don't tease! But I'll guarantee it's something you'll like. Well, children, I've got to trotter back to the store. All home for dinner, I suppose? Mrs. Meadows has asked Ralph Truman and his sister, Annette, and Bruce Kruger, I believe."

"And Dalhart," Mrs. Meadows smiled upon them all as she rose from the table. Apparently she did not see the quick frown that bushied T. Q.'s eyebrows at mention of her nephew's name. "Ralph and Annette, Dal and Bruce are going on to a dance late at the Bradleys, so you girls will have plenty of time for study this evening."

"Why?" Billy looked at Mrs. Meadows with evident embarrassment. "I've been invited to the dance, too. Ralph Truman asked me yesterday at tea. I suppose we were all going."

"I—or we had to decline, because we knew we'd have to study tonight," Nyda lied, as she rose languidly from the table and turned away, slipping an arm about Winnie's waist, as if to warn Billy that, though they might squabble, they were banded together against her.

"Good girls!" T. Q. called after them heartily, but Billy saw a half-sad, half-amused smile on his stern mouth. He was not deceived by Nyda's lie. Life was going to be more complicated than he had bargained for, with three foster-daughters in his home.

Sheer frocks and ill-timed social engagements no longer remain a worry. Lost days are fewer, and health better.

It is called "KOTEX." Ends the insecurity of old-time sanitary pads; 5 times as absorbent! And odorless—ends all fear of offending.

As easily disposed of as a piece of tissue. No laundry. No embarrassment.

You get it at any drug or department store simply by saying "KOTEX." Buy without hesitation, and be sure to get the genuine. Only Kotex itself is "like" Kotex.

Eight in 10 better-class women employ it. Proves the risk of old ways.
