CHAPTER 32 JEANNE IS MADE CONSPICUOUS

Victor Barstowe accompanied Jeanne to his mother's box at Bonnicetti's concert. He seemed as amazed as his fiancée at the display of friendliness.

"So interesting to see you again, Miss Dare," murmured Mrs. Barstowe, extending the tips of her fingers. "Miss Dayton said she met you at luncheon, but you made no mention of coming to the concert."

"Oh Miss Dare was too engrossed!" laughed Vera Dayton. "She scarcely saw me, and I doubt if she even remembered she had an engagement for the concert."

"Quite well," she replied serenely. "Especially, since Signor Bonnicetti himself sent me tickets."

"Mrs. Barstowe raised her brows. 'You know how much I suffer from rheumatism, don't you?' 'Quite well,' murmured Jeanne, stretching the truth casually. 'He sometimes plays for me when I have people in to tea. Would you care to come some day to hear him?'"

"Bonnicetti?" the latter gasped unbelievably. "Why you must be a millionaire to get him to play so much as the Humoresque."

"When the first exquisite notes came from his violin, she stirred restlessly. She did not want to hear those liquid, impassioned strains that woke that vague, unnamed longing in her, that made her scorn her great pretense, that and which shriveled from Barstowe's hand which sought hers in the dark seclusion of the box."

When the first number was over and Bonnicetti was bowing his acknowledgement to the tumultuous applause, she saw his eyes go to the box, which she should have occupied, and it seemed to her that his shoulders sagged a little as one who is disappointed.

War, they tell us, benefits the race. It makes weaklings stronger. And strong men stronger still. It develops courage; Gives impetus to art and literature. Encourages the cooperative attitude. Ennobles mankind.

It is beneficial to kill And the killed. And murder in which many cooperate Is bigger and better murder. And a statue of a general on a horse.

Into the iron jaws And the erstwhile weakling And the stronger strong men Find it the more exhilarating To throw their improved physiques Into the doubly improved machinery of slaughter.

With which War mass-produces nobility— And dividends— And benefits the race.

WINE AND WOMEN (An Address given by a W. C. T. U. Representative at London)

In the old saloon days the barroom with its bright lights and social attractions tempted the lads but never the lassies, for no girl could cross that threshold and keep her place in her social world.

The liquor control act of this Province replaced the bar by the social glass in the home, and women have participated with the men in this government inspected government sold beverage, with the approval of respectable society.

What a certain bright university student said to me once, I was told with some amusement that the one in question had appeared at a Class Function so "it up" that others had a great time keeping her from attending the party.

Ford Addresses Auto Dealers

DETROIT, Dec. 7.—In one of his rare addresses to the automobile dealers that "I think 1934 will be a very good year for everybody that works."

"This is the only way to get our country through this depression and to help our President."

"There is plenty of work, so we have all got to pitch in and get all the business we can," said Ford, briefly addressing the dealers through an internic telephone hook-up from his Dearborn office.

"How did you like Mrs. Green's talk on international relations, Mrs. Brown?" "I couldn't stand it! It was terrible; her earrings clashed with the shade of lipstick she used; her shoes were not at all the thing for that hat she wore; and anyone ought to know better than to wear a belt with a dress like that."

Corn Leads In Grain Market

CHICAGO, Dec. 7.—Corn took the leadership in the grain markets today, and averaged higher in price, with persistent buying in small lots a feature.

Pronounced tendencies to hold rural marketings of corn back with the assistance of Government loans attracted much attention.

"Almost every man can find work if he uses his brains," asserted the man who had traveled a good deal—that is, if he has the ability to adapt himself like the piano-tuner I once met in the West of Queensland.

"Why I said to him, for we were in a wild unsettled country 'surely by piano-tuning can't be very lucrative here? I shouldn't imagine that pianos were very plentiful in this region."

"No, they're not," said the piano-tuner; "but I make a pretty fair income tightening up wire fences!"

To have true enthusiasm, we must have faith, assurance, hope, reliance and confidence in our own loyalty and ability.—Van Amburgh.
