Book reviewers are at present declaiming on the merits of the latest book from the pen of Dr Andrew McPhail, Montreal formerly of this province. Dr McPhail is spoken of as one of Canada's most noteworthy prose writers whose interest in current affairs is keen and his works exhibit a clear understanding of his subjects. The book now being referred to is "Essays in Politics" and it contains ten political essays dealing with such vital questions as Loyalty to England, immigration, the tariff and navy, etc. His essay on "Loyalty—to what?" is being widely commented on and specially makes reference to the probable annexation of Canada to the United States. Another essay on Immigration is a masterly treatise of the subject, tho the Doctor's views on this point are not acceptable in their entirety by all the reviewers, they are most interesting and bring out some new theories.
