Mankind today "On way home" Says Col. Ralston

HAMILTON, N. Y., June 10—(CP)—Col. J. L. Ralston, Canadian Defence Minister, yesterday told Colgate University graduates that liberty is at stake in the war, and illustrated what he meant with an excursion into British parliamentary history.

"When the British House of Commons has concluded its sitting and is about to shut its doors, the cry goes up," he said, "who goes home?"

"That cry had its origin in the early days when a member of Parliament, walking alone at night through the streets of London, was liable to be robbed by gangsters and cutthroats that infested the highways. The doorknobs of the House were instructed to make arrangements that those members who lived in the same district and went home in the same direction should leave in groups, followed by link boys carrying flickering torches to light their way through the shadows where lurked the robber and the murderer."

"Today mankind is on its way home, along roads once again infested by bandits and murderers."

Mr. Ralston then quoted this verse:

"The men that are men again; who goes home? "Tocin and trumpeter! Who goes home? "For there's blood on the field and blood on the foam "And blood on the body when Man goes home. "And a voice valedictory... who is for Victory? "Who is for Liberty? Who goes home?"

The Defence Minister came to Colgate to receive an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws and deliver the commencement address.

C. G. I. T. Girls Conduct Services

Because of the absence of Rev. W. C. Picketts at the Maritime Conference in Sackville, the Murray Harbour Canadian Girls in Training groups took charge of the Sunday afternoon service at Little Sands.

As the girls in their attractive uniforms marched up the two aisles of the church they sang the C. G. I. T. hymn, Mrs. E. H. MacKinnon, leader of the Intermediate group, conducted the service of worship. Miss Lucy Laurier was organist. The Scripture lesson was read by Miss Loreen MacNeill.

The music consisted of two special numbers by the choir girls, and a quiet sweetly sung by Mrs. MacKinnon and Miss Rita Chapman.

Mrs. W. C. Picketts, leader of the Senior group, presided at the church-based her talk on the C. G. I. T. Purpose, urging the girls to live up to the high standard set for a Canadian Girl in Training, and telling her audience something of the splendid programs which Canadian Girl in Training groups are carrying out. She commended the girls for their faithful attendance at church and Sunday School, for the War Savings Policies which they had tried to buy, and for their other fine projects which they had successfully carried out during the year. The service closed with the National Anthem and "Laps."

The kindness of Miss Kathleen MacFarlane, and Messrs. Grilly Lea, Fred Leach, Bruce MacKinnon, and William MacKenzie, who took the girls to Little Sands in their cars, was much appreciated.

At the evening service at Murray Harbour, the Slippery Stitches Young People's Group conducted the service. The Club President, Miss Joyce Cooper, had charge of the services, assisted by Miss Marion MacLure, Miss Pearl Anderson, Miss Hope Davey, Miss Roma Leach, Miss Vivian Laye, and Miss Kathleen MacFarlane.

Miss Hope Davey gave the address and took as her text, "So run that you may obtain." She urged that young people put as much into living the Christian life as the Olympic champions did into running their races.

The music for the evening consisted of a duet by Misses Rita and Dorothy Chapman, and two anthems by the choir, the first in the service taken by Mr. and Mrs. E. H. MacKinnon. Large congregations were present at both services.

Wartime Needs Bring Canada Rare Industry

TORONTO, June 11—(CP)—The task of supplying high precision instruments vitally necessary to the operation of land, sea and air forces, has fallen to a Canadian establishment where for the first time in the Dominion's history the complete manufacture of fire-control instruments is being done by one company. Here are manufactured gun sights, range finders, telescopes, periscopes, sight telescopes, dial sights and stereoscopes.

This important link in the chain of war production is Research Enterprises Ltd., at Lesclide, near Toronto, formed under the Department of Munitions and Supply when war exigencies made it necessary to assure unhampered production of the instruments. The company now operates a plant containing 180,000 square feet of space, on a site which early last September was nothing but a grassy plain.

Before the war most of the world's optical glass was produced in Germany, Czechoslovakia and Belgium. The European market was cut off and England's production is entirely taken by her demands. In England some plants specialize in the production of large quantities of specific types of instruments, but at Research Enterprises the manufacture of all types is being carried out.

Interpreting The War

By Kirke L. Simpson Associated Press Staff Writer

The warning voiced by Prime Minister Churchill against premature "jubilation" over indicated Allied successes in Syria and Lebanon found a quick echo in repeated Axis bombing of Matruh in Egypt. A test of Gen. Wavell's ability to halt a renewed Axis drive from Libya into Egypt may be taken on that front, more than 100 miles eastward from the Libyan-Egyptian border, is based on the Matruh railroad.

Two air assaults on Matruh in as many nights, either from Nazi bases in Libya or across the Mediterranean, are being reported. The first from that quarter that the first formidable German "reaction" to Allied invasion of Syria will come. And while that reaction "remains obscure and unknown," Mr. Churchill warned, jubilation over Syrian developments is premature.

There are other indications that Egypt itself will be the next main battleground. Persistent reports which bear the stamp of credibility say that heavy German and Italian reinforcements were shuttled from Sicily to Libya while the best of the British air force and armor and air power away from the Sicilian Straits bridgehead.

Reaction of French colonial forces in North Africa to the Allied invasion in the Levant is yet uncertain. Neither Vichy officials nor Gen. Weyand, Petain's deputy across the Mediterranean, have clear views on the matter. Weyand's colonial troops might play in the struggle.

Other intimations of an impending Axis drive eastward toward Alexandria and the Suez Canal have come from Rome. Withdrawal of Nazi air divisions from Sicily for service elsewhere, presumably in the eastern Mediterranean, was reported, was recently announced in the Italian capital.

British-Free French occupation of Lebanon and Syria would greatly lessen the danger of an Axis pincer attack on Egypt from east and west, but it would also extend British defence lines. The British

MINUTE MINIATURES

BRIEF BACKGROUND IN THE CAREERS OF CANADA'S CAPTAINS IN WAR.

MAJOR-GENERAL ERNEST WILLIAM SANSON, D. S. O.

Officer Commanding Canada's First Armoured Division.

Major-General Ernest William Sanson, D.S.O., commands Canada's 1st Armoured Division, slated to proceed overseas during 1941. He is the son of "Pukka Staff" man and "Pukka Staff" man to old Imperial Army ranks, he is considered an ideal division commander.

General Sanson is a "Herring Chucker", born and reared in New Brunswick, son of Major Edwin Sanson of Stanley. Coming from a long line of military ancestors, it was only natural that he should join his local Militia Unit at an early age. He was commissioned in the Stanley Company of the 71st York Regiment in 1907 at the age of 16.

Through public and High School and working as an engineer in Ontario when war broke out, Sanson volunteered for service with his old regiment and proceeded to England as a Lieutenant in the 12th Battalion. After a period of instructional duty in England, he crossed to France in 1915 with the 11th Brigade Machine Gun Company. Following the Somme battles in France, he organized the 16th Canadian Machine Gun Company which he commanded with the 4th Division until the formation of the Canadian Machine Gun Corps in 1918 and the end of the war found him commanding the 1st Battalion Canadian Machine Gun Corps. He was awarded the D.S.O. and mentioned in despatches for general distinction on Active Service.

After the war, Sanson was appointed to the Command of Royal Canadian Machine Gun Brigade, organized as a unit of the Permanent Force. After the disbandment of this unit in 1923 he commanded the Machine Gun Wing of the Small Arms School at Comnaught near Ottawa.

He graduated from the Army Staff College, Camberley, England in 1925 where he trained under Field Marshal Lord Trenchard and that well-known British authority on the employment of armoured formations, General Fuller. On his return to Canada he held a wide range of responsible posts including G.S.O. 2 at Halifax and in the Directorate of Military Training at Headquarters in Ottawa; A.A. & Q.M.G., Regina; G.S.O. 1 Montreal and Director of Military Training, Defence Headquarters. He was in this appointment when the present hostilities broke out.

General Sanson went overseas in December, 1939 with General MacNaughton as his Assistant Adjutant and Quarter-master General in the 1st Division. When General Crerar returned to Ottawa as Chief of the General Staff, General MacNaughton succeeded him as Officer Commanding, Canadian Military Headquarters, London, with General Sanson as Deputy-Adjutant General.

When it was decided to form a 3rd Division, Canada speculated on who would lead it with a human, dramatic interest somehow reserved for the active services only. "Sanson's got the 3rd" was repeated with satisfaction on all sides after the press release of October 22nd last. On March 4th, 1941 he was transferred from the 3rd Division to command Canada's 1st Armoured Division. Looking down from above, "Pukka Staff" to General Sanson in his past career says of him, "He draws work out of people. He makes a wonderful instructor from every point of view, possesses great knowledge and has an extraordinary way of imparting it to others." "He has no conceit," says another voice. "He knows how to be decent to officers and men under him, and is never a bully, for he establishes excellent discipline."

The 3rd Division's training has been vastly benefited by General Sanson's experience in England. He played his part in Canada's nearest to action as it fell to his lot, during the lines of General Peckles, to prepare the 2nd Brigade for operations in Norway but the operations for which the Canadians were earmarked were cancelled as the troops were ready to embark.

General Sanson has learned the secret of combining hard work and relaxation, says fit and jolly with a touch of humor that is a symbol of strength in really bad times.

Dull Grey Ships Thrills, Romance But Softly Told

By JACK BRAYLEY Canadian Press Staff Writer

AN EASTERN CANADIAN PORT, June 11—(CP)—A ring of armed guards, drab blotches of dirty copper paint, a show of passes, steamship employees who "don't know a thing" and a maze of restrictions add up to a big headache for Canada's wartime ship news reporters trying to get stories from a port that is further obscured by a label dateline.

But on the other side of the solid guard of veterans and behind the dirty gray paint lie more thrills and romance than ever put into Montreal or Victoria or Saint John in the glistening white and gold brad days of peacetime.

The war has changed all the spick and span efficiency of those easy days of passenger list handouts and long heralded arrivals; of notables who talked freely and skippers who related minor adventures merely for the listening.

Today drab and dirty, their names hidden under a grey camouflage and revealed only on the closest scrutiny, the liners plod into port at all hours, unspoken and unnumbered. It takes much showing of identification cards and much persuasive argument to reach their war-scarred sides. Successive rings of veterans guards, police, customs and immigration officials have to be passed.

Officers Wary

The purser who used to meet newsmen with a broad smile, a passenger list and a helpful tip now shrugs an apology and looks as though he were guarding the Crown Jewels.

But both passengers and crew, the strain of a hazardous ocean crossing behind them, are usually in talkative mood, and from them come the stories of adventure on the high seas. They recount chapters in the vital battle of the Atlantic, stories of running fights with raiders, of thrilling rescues, and of tragedy.

Passengers, most of whom are on government business and in official capacities, come drifting in by dozens on freighters bearing house flags which in peacetime represented the ultra degree of comfort in ocean passenger transport. Cabin class now means merely a secondary steel cell in the bridge-house 'hivis' in peacetime afforded privacy to the second wireless man. The crew are doubled up and the passengers, less important in the voyage, are tripled up.

The freighters are shared out to the various lines to compensate for the rationing of their proud liners, now operating as armed merchantmen and troop transports.
