ANTIPON IN CANADA

SPREADING THE FAME OF THE GREAT BRITISH SPECIFIC FOR RAPID FAT-REDUCTION

The burden of the obesity is so distressing and so unappreciating, and is generally so difficult to get rid of with any degree of permanence, that the introduction to Canada of the famous British Specific Antipon will be welcome in many quarters. The preparation is not unknown here already, but the obstacles in the way of its supply to the general public were necessarily great. All difficulties are now removed.

Here the important discovery of Antipon the treatment usually employed for the reduction of weight included starvation dietary rules, sweating, purging, together with mineral drugging. All these things are weakening in the extreme, and when obstinately persisted in, ruinous to the constitution. Antipon is diametrically opposed to such drastic methods.

To expel the superfluous fatty matter from the system is all very well, but the body must be amply nourished at the same time. Now, Antipon not only rapidly eliminates the excess of fat, but overcomes the unfortunate tendency to "run to fat." Ample wholesome food therefore becomes Antipon's strength-giving ally, and there is no need to dread that the extra nourishment taken will bring about a re-development of excessive fatty tissue.

Every dose of Antipon is a sure step in the direction of the recovery of beauty of form, and vigorous nervous energy.

The decrease of weight is not a tedious process. Within twenty-four hours of the first dose there is a reduction varying, according to the dual conditions, between 8 oz. to 3 lbs. The scales will be the unerring recorder. The daily decrease is eminently satisfactory. When normal weight and symmetrical proportions are regained the treatment is no longer necessary.

Antipon contains only the most harmless vegetable substances in solution, the liquid being in appearance like a light red wine. It is palatable, refreshing and slightly tart, and never occasions any unpleasant reactionary effects.

Antipon can be obtained at all drug stores, from stock or to order, or in case of any difficulty, a large case will be forwarded direct from the Antipon Laboratories, Store Street, London, W. C. Eng., carriage paid, on receipt of remittance for 5 dols. 11c.

To-day I am feeling fine and a physician, meeting me on the street, asked the reason for my improved appearance. I said, 'I am taking Fruit-a-tives.' The usual Grand Orange Celebration will be held on the Exhibition Grounds, Charlottetown, on Monday, July 12, 1915.
It has been persistently reported that there would not be a Celebration this year, but the Committee believe there is greater reason than ever why this great national and patriotic celebration should be a glorious success.

The Protestant Orphanage is in greater need of funds during this critical period than if there was no war. Every cent raised will be for the benefit of that most worthy institution.

While thousands of our brethren and fellow citizens are at the front fighting the battles of freedom the committee believe that thousands of our people at home will be glad to return their devotion to the cause of freedom by uniting with us in the celebration of the Glorious Twelfth.

Posters and full particulars will be published in a few days.

A PASTOR NEEDED

A clergyman's little daughter was sent to bed supperless for some misdemeanor, just before her father's return from a short trip. Hearing him enter, some time later, the young culprit called down.
"Mamma, I want to see daddy."
"There was no response from below."
"Mamma, please let daddy get me a drink of water."
When that, too, failed, a small white figure came to the head of the stairs and said sternly: "Mrs. Hastings, I am a very sick woman. I must see my pastor at once."
"Needless to say her pastor went up."

CONTRASTING RUFFLES.

There is a quaint atmosphere about the petticoats now offered for sale. This is due to the fact that flowered material often appears on the petticoat in some form or other. Of course, many undershirts are made entirely of materials covered with flowers, but there are a number made of white satin or taffeta, and these are trimmed with three or four full ruffles or flowered satin or taffeta. Sometimes the flowers are blue, sometimes pink and sometimes yellow. At any rate, the use of flowered ruffles is one that should be adopted to be in keeping with the many quaint styles of outer garments.

TALES TOLD BY MEN IN THE FIGHTING LINE ON LAND AND ON SEA

TRENCH LIFE

A correspondent at the front writes:
"During nine months of war a great change has been working very subtly in the spirit of the French people, and under their hats and who can perceive the undercurrents of national ideas, have begun to realize that after the war the whole character of public life in France will be profoundly modified. It will be impossible to put up the same old platform cries and party controversies, and to which they left off suddenly on Saturday, August 2, 1914, when martial law was declared and the greater part of the able-bodied manhood of France, irrespective of class and creed, was called to the colors and put under the discipline of war."
Those nine months of great ordeal have been like a kind of deep trance (filled with dreadful dreams and spiritual agonies) from which France will wake up, on the declaration of peace, like a man who has undergone a frightful operation, "successfully," as the doctors say. During those days and nights, when death seems very close, all hatreds and animosities fade away into nothingness and the convalescent man, rejoicing in life again, humbled, and wonders at the old follies which used to tease his brain, so needlessly and stupidly, knowing now that they were of trivial account when weighed in the balance of life and death.

So it is with France. Out of the view of the war there has come a new understanding of nationality. It is called "the Spirit of the Trenches." It belongs to the comradeship of men who have stood shoulder to shoulder in those ditches, sharing each other's danger, tending each other's wounds and dying side by side.
SPIRIT OF COMRADESHIP
In the trenches all classes of men have croaked together, talking, talking, talking, as the shells go bursting monotonously overhead, killing one of them now and then, and making another nasty mess which has to be cleared up for comfort's sake. The laboring men and the peasants have given details of their financial affairs to well-to-do bourgeois who hated the Socialism of Gustave Herve and thought the poor were too much coddled. Those trench conversations have made a difference to many points of view, but the greatest change of opinion on one side and the other has come from action rather than from words, and from suffering even more than from action. Men who have been cold together, who have been starved together, and who have been carried from the field of honor on the same blood-stained stretchers, are not likely to accuse each other, after the war is over, of treachery to la Patrie, or of unpardonable crimes. On the contrary, they are likely, as one of the most violent of the anti-clericals has just said, "to tolerate each other's creed, to recognize that one man may believe in the Catholic Church and another disbelieve, without beating up old fires of hatred, and to realize that, as no two human beings are quite alike, so each man should have liberty of faith and conscience, without being penalized or oppressed by the tyranny of a political majority."
In the immediate future of France the politician who endeavors to re-awaken those old strifes, will have a very "thin" time. In fact, the type will have a hard struggle to keep his place. "Out of this sacred union," says M. Marcel Sembat, the Socialist leader and Minister of Justice, "will nothing remain after victory? Without doubt, political parties will resume their distinct action, and we need not regret it, and the essential condition of representative government. But do not let us hesitate to say that it would be a cruel defect for France if, when the war had taught us nothing, and if, when the peril passed, we hastened to forget its lessons. The habit of acting together ought to leave in our souls an ineffaceable mark. Outside the bounds of political conflicts we shall keep the spirit of union for everkeeping the prosperity of France."

The Spirit of the Trenches will not die in France when peace is declared.

LESSONS LEARNED IN THE TRENCHES

Queer lessons have been learned in the trench, and no politician with an axe to grind, or a shrill little war-cry for which he gets his wages, will be able to replace that knowledge by the old fetish worship of ignorance and hatred. The anticlerical and free thinker has become amazingly tolerant of priests and nuns. A Minister of France who promised "to put out the lights of Heaven" and to plunder the churches and convents for the benefit of honest atheists, would not get a hearing in these days. The anticlerical soldier has been fighting in the same ditch with a village curé who was not only, it appears, a jolly good fellow with a fine sense of humor and a hearty laugh, but also behaved with such gallantry in a hot half hour that he was decorated with the Legion of Honor and embraced by the President of the Republic. There have been so many acts of heroic courage done by these young priests of France, many of whom belonged to religious orders which had been expelled from the country, that it would be a ridiculous thing in future to call them the enemies of the Republic, and to turn them out of their houses by the butt ends of rifles.
So, too, these young priests have learnt some much needed tolerance for the free-thinkers and anti-clericals. Sitting in the mud with them they have listened to their point of view, and seen a fine spirituality in the eyes of men who have died gladly for a great death—for the only idea they held with faith—which was a love of France. On each side men have seen the essential virtues of human nature shining through the grosslest clay or making a mockery of mere intellectual powers and acts of self-sacrifice, of love between man and man, of comradeship stronger than the fear of death.

Aristocrat and apache have shared a truss of straw together, and have put their arms about each other's necks on cold bleak fields beneath the stars where they had been left to die because no brandardier could cross the zone of fire to them. Lying there, with their blood mingling in pools about them, they have talked of their mothers and wives, of the great crime of war thrust upon the peoples by diplomats and castes, of the mystery of death into which they were both drifting. The aristocrat speaks the purest French, the apache the vilest argot of La Vilette or Menilmontant but their ideas are wonderfully alike in the few broken sentences murmured under the star light. They are both strange as it may appear, men, and Frenchmen, with the same primitive emotions of fear, and the love of a woman somewhere, and the need to drink.
