

Could Not Sleep Heart and Nerves Were So Bad

Mr. Geo. Meek, Windsor, Ont., writes: "I suffered with my heart and nerves and could not sleep at night for weeks in my head. I managed to keep at my work somehow, until I began to have dizzy spells which got so bad I could not go to work. I was afraid to go out any place, for very often I would stagger on my feet, and everything in front of me would turn black and fade away. While I was home sick a friend told me to take I got four boxes and by the time I had used them the pains and noises in my head ceased and I was able to get a good night's rest. Although that was six years ago I have never been troubled with that complaint again."

PARADISE

By COSMO HAMILTON Author of "Scandal" and the "Blindness of Virtue."

Finally, with a curious laugh, he gave the letter to Christie. "I'd like you to open it, if you don't mind," he said, being superstitious. "Your voice will temper the wind to the shorn lamb."

"Anything you say," said Christie, "but—I dunno. I wish you hadn't got it." All the same she went to the window for the last of the night. "It was written on Stirling Castle paper and dated '29 March, 1912."

"Two weeks after he told me never to see him again." "Dear Anthony, it says, 'I have today returned from a reluctant visit to London, and am writing this far from its noise and futility rather, late at night. Dining with your Uncle Alan the evening before I left, I told him about my inability to do—or get you a commission in a tribe of Arabs so that you may be constantly in fights.'"

"Great Scott," said Tony breathlessly. "That was a bright idea." "A ghastly idea," cried Christie. "We never should have met."

"Why not? I should probably have raided a town where you were playing and carried you on to my tent. But go on. Don't stop. This is like hearing my father's voice over a telephone connected with another world."

"But I have no friends among Arabs," she read. "I am a most untravelled man. The trouble in Algeria goes to show, according to my way of thinking, and that of Lord Roberts, that you will, however, get all the fighting that is good for you nearer home. My intention is not to interfere with your career in any way. If you have any of your good and beautiful mother in law, two or three unassisted years, I will help to bring out, if, on the contrary, you are all Stirling of the ancient vintage as your uncle asserts, you will proceed unimpeded on your way to the gutter. Be that as it may, I have conceived a plan, as the outcome of my talk to Uncle Alan, that I am now about to disclose to you in this letter,—one of which will be found among my papers by Alexander after my death, and on delivery to you if he can find your death. The doctor consulted by me in Hartley Street does not give me much more than another year to live. During my honeymoon with your beloved mother we visited the South Seas and while there, being under the spell of its strong romance, I bought an island called Paradise for a comparatively small amount of money, believing that, in after years, we might renew the joy of young love among its coconut trees in primeval simplicity and sunny peace. The opportunity to do so, however, ever came, owing to the responsibilities of family life, but I maintained the ownership of the island and it is mine today. Through it these years it has been under the charge of a man named Quixtrader, who lives in a place called Apla in the Pacific, from whom I have heard from time to time. He deeds of this property, which I have been given to understand, worthless though lovely, are out in the hands of my lawyers, and you will believe, knowing me, and buried in a tin box on the island in a certain spot, for the reason that I did not desire to lay myself open to the incredulous laughter of my legal advisers for so unattractive a purchase, being Scotch. The enclosed chart, of which Quixtrader knows nothing, indicates quite clearly the place where, in that woe-ridden mood, I buried the box. If, when this letter and its enclosure are placed in your hands, you find yourself with sufficient energy and courage and assiduity to set forth on a voyage of discovery, Paradise is yours, and there you may establish yourself as the ruler of its innumerable natives and in turning back the calendar to

Christie banked that money—got as Tony liked to think, for the triumphant procession to the South Sea Islands, but against a rainy day. That practical little soul had saved a long apprenticeship in poverty. Hunger had been on intimate terms with her. At any time there might be a change in the office of the Metropole and another man's friend turn Tony off the driver's seat. And as to Paradise, it was not only unattainable, but a waste of time to consider. An island, probably very hot, with biting insects, bad water, dust, with coloured people who danced and made weird noises, without soap, shops and theatres, buses, and the constant tangles that London gave. She wouldn't be able to stand it. She refused to accept all that stuff about Tony. He was not a throwback. He was, as she had known from the instant that she had met him, a gentleman, born and belonging to his time.

She was, however, wrong,—all wrong and wide of the mark. The truth was that the thoughts and dreams of this outwardly modern man were centred wholly on Paradise. The island called Tony over the incessant roar of traffic, the quiet hymn of the country to which he drove his fares, and the dramatic calm of the city during its hours of sleep. Its voice became insistently. It made him homesick. It said to him that there, among those naive people, he would find himself back in the age that was his; that there, like the ancient Stirling whose blood was in him, he would come into his own, take his place as chief, and give his people a kingdom, a life, a hero worship, pomp, colour and patriotism,—and make them pay.

PIMPLES ITCHED AND BURNED On Neck. Spread in Little Red Spots. Cuticura Healed. "A few little pimples appeared on the back of my neck. They itched and burned so badly that I scratched them, and the more I scratched the worse they itched. The trouble began to spread in little red spots and I could hardly stand it. It lasted about a year. I read an advertisement for Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for a free sample. After using it a few days I could see an improvement so purchased more, and in less than three weeks I was healed." (Signed) Miss Annie Tyess, Delburne, Alberta, Dec. 16, 1924.

Then the appearances of jolly St. Nicholas, who greeted the audience, especially the little folks, in his usually cheerful manner began to unload the heavy laden tree that stood so handsomely decorated in the corner a lovely looking object it was glowing brightly, every branch illumined and gently tossed as if to tell the message of the new born King, much is due the ladies, for their strenuous efforts, also their labour, which showed the high marks and respect of the teachers and superintendent, towards their pupils. Mr. John McDonald, has sold his valuable horse and has purchased a trotter and expects to make some fast steps on Morell ice, at some of the ice racing this winter. Train up your speed horses.
