DOUBLE BOILER PLEASES WOODSTOCK LADY

Free premiums for poker hands with Rosebud cut plug tobacco.

"Do I like my husband to smoke a pipe?" exclaimed a lady in Woodstock. "I most certainly do. It is his greatest pleasure, and I share in his enjoyment; for he gives me the poker hands that come with Rosebud, and I exchange these for things I have always wanted, for the house. My latest premium is a 'Wear-Ever' aluminum double boiler, which I obtained for five complete sets of poker hands. My advice to the ladies who want to do their cooking conveniently, and get the best results, is to have their husbands smoke Rosebud cut plug and save the poker hands for 'Wear-Ever' aluminum ware." Rosebud cut plug and the poker hands form an ideal combination for family satisfaction, for this smoking tobacco is a genuine cut plug with a rich, fragrant flavour—that gives the smoker the best value on the market—and the premiums certainly do please the family. The large ten cent package of Rosebud contains one poker hand—the larger fifteen cent package contains two poker hands.

REFUSED BRITISH PASSPORT

(By The Canadian Press)

LONDON, July 29.—Miss Marie Williams, a Scotch operatic singer, has married her husband, M. Sergej Radamsky, a Russo-American singer, for the second time. She explained that she married him first in Moscow. As he was a naturalized American citizen she assumed that she would automatically become an American citizen. The British authorities took this view and said that as Marie was no longer a British subject she was not entitled to a British passport. Americans, however, decline to recognize weddings celebrated in Russia, and she was refused an American passport. The authorities stated that the solution was to re-marry in England, after which Marie becomes a provisional American citizen. M. Radamsky said pessimistically that he could see himself re-marrying his wife in every county to which they go together. He would not mind marrying her a hundred times, but it was likely to prove an expensive business.

For The Cook

GRAHAM-CRACKER SANDWICHES

Graham crackers may be used for making many crunchy sandwiches. One cup of peanut brittle crushed to a powder with a rolling pin and added to 1/2 cup of whipped cream will supply filling for a dozen graham-cracker sandwiches.

Three tablespoons of currant jelly, chopped pecans, and a small package cream cheese, mixed together, also make a delectable filling. Bits of banana and chopped walnut may be used in a cream cheese filling.

For those who are fond of the malted-milk flavor, a sandwich filling of 2 tablespoons of chocolate malted-milk powder and 1 teaspoon of vanilla, added to a cream cheese filling, is delicious.

A Morning Smile

It happened at a boisterous meeting of the village council, where the Toonerville trolley meets all the trains. The chairman could not control the meeting and in despair, he arose from his chair and called, "Order, order," gentlemen. If we cannot work in harmonium I shall be compelled to vaccinate my seat.

Whose Job is Harder? Dorothy Dix Compares Housewife's With Breadwinner's Work

If Husbands and Wives Could Change Jobs for a Day, So That Each Could See How Hard is the Other One's Work, They Would Never Again Belittle Each Other's Achievements

A woman writes me: "My husband and I are always quarreling over my work. He says: 'Gosh, haven't you got those trousers mended for me yet?' Gee, what do you do with your time? I could do all the work you do in a whole day in thirty minutes and have the balance of the time left to play golf in. Why, you've got a regular snap, with nothing to do but to take care of the children and do the housework. Wish I could have it easy like that." To which I respond with heat: "I have a snap, have I, and you are Mr. Efficiency who could do all of my work in thirty minutes and be a play boy the balance of the time, could you? How do you get that way? Don't you ever notice me getting up at 6 o'clock in the morning to get the breakfast while you and the kids are still sleeping? Did you ever watch me doing a marathon between the kitchen and the bathroom, trying to cook the cereal with one hand and wash behind the children's ears with the other? Did you ever watch me double-timing, trying to soothe a teething baby and find you a clean shirt and get the children dressed for school?"

"And how do you think the house gets cleaned up and three meals a day cooked and the laundry work done and the food bought and the stockings darned if I don't do it? Let me tell you, my good man, that homes are still run by womanpower, and in this particular one I'm it, and I am about the nearest thing to a perpetual-motion machine you ever saw."

"Work! I wish I had a part-time job like yours, that only lasts from 9 to 5, with an hour off for lunch, and I had nothing to do but stand around and gab with a lot of men and pretty youngsters." And then friend husband jams on his hat and bangs the front door behind him and I go and scrub out the bathtub for the seven-millionth time and pick up the papers that he has scattered around for the billionth time and start on my 159636th round of the domestic treadmill. And we are no nearer settling the question of which one of us works the harder than we were the first time we ever debated it. And it is still good for a fight every time it comes up."

In thousands of other homes husbands and wives are snarling at each other over this same bone of contention, because each one thinks that he or she has got the worse end of the matrimonial bargain. This is natural and inevitable, because each of us know the difficulties and the hardships of our own lot and we do not know what others have to suffer.

It is that way all through life. We put the loudspeaker on our own troubles and the soft pedal on other people's. We pity ourselves because we have to work and struggle and strain and deny ourselves in order to get the things we want, and we look enviously on those who, we imagine have had everything handed to them on a silver salver without any effort on their part. But if we only knew the truth, they have bought success with their life blood, even as we have.

You often hear a business man say: "I don't want my son to go into the grocery trade and have to slave as I have done. I want him to be a professional man, so he can take things easy." And you will hear a professional man say: "I don't want my son to have to go through the agony of weary waiting for clients that I did. It is heart-breaking. I want him to go into business where he can make a quick success."

So it is not surprising that husbands and wives should each underrate the work that the other does, and I often wish that it were possible for them to swap places for a day or a week and thus have an opportunity to find out from actual experience how heavy is the burden of the other part has to bear. Believe me, it would make them wondrous kind and appreciative.

As it is, their estimate of each other's work is based on ignorance and lack of personal experience. The man comes home to a house that is clean and orderly, a well-cooked meal and children who are all tidied up. And never having swept a floor or cooked a meal or washed and dressed a baby in his life, he has a vague general idea that these things happen automatically and he hasn't an idea of the thousands of steps his wife has taken and the hours of labor she has given to achieve this result.

But if he could, just for one day, do his wife's work, sweep over the same floor a dozen times, wash the same little faces over and over again, assemble the hundred things it takes to make a good meal, darn the same old socks, answer to the incessant call for M-o-t-h-e-r, wrestle with a crying baby while doing all the other jobs, why, Mr. Husband would simply flee back to his own job and never again think of his wife as leading a life of inglorious ease.

And it is the same way with women. When a woman goes downtown it is a sort of lark to her. She gets a thrill out of seeing new faces. The stir and activity of people moving about amuse her. The pretty things in the stores delight her. It is a treat to her to have lunch in a restaurant and not have to eat her own cooking. And, for the life of her, she can't help picturing her husband's going to work as going to a sort of party because he goes downtown and works among other people, so she doesn't see what he has to complain about nor why he should be so tired when he comes home at night.

But if she could exchange places with him for a day; if she could know the nerve-racking strain under which he works and the fierce competition he has to meet; if she could know the anxiety that tears at his soul when he wonders how he is to meet a note in the bank; if she could know the despair that fills him as he sees his life work and all that he has built up tumbling down about him; if she could know the aggravation of dealing with stupid and careless and uninterested employes or if she could know what it was to be bawled out and ground down and insulted by a tyrannical employer and to have to endure insults because one dared not give up one's job, she would never again disparage her husband's work.

Now that so many women go into business they have an opportunity of putting themselves in a man's place and knowing what his work is really like, and it makes them very tender and sympathetic to their husbands. But men never do a woman's work and so they still think that cooking and scrubbing and baby-tending is not work, it is just the diversion of an idle hour.

Which is a pity. DOROTHY DIX.

THOUSANDS OF PILGRIMS VISIT GERMANY TO STOP AT CHARLEMAGNE'S TOMB

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE, Germany, July 28.—Thousands of pilgrims, including many high dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church, will come from all parts of Europe to this ancient city between July 10 and July 27, as their fathers before them have done every seven years for the past seven centuries. Their goal is the venerable cathedral where Charlemagne is buried, and where for 700 years successive German emperors were crowned, to do reverence to the famous relics that are kept in the sanctuary there. Religious festivities will be mingled with secular rejoicings over the evacuation of the city by the occupying forces. Aix-la-Chapelle ranked in the 14th and 15th centuries with Rome, Santiago de Compostella and Jerusalem as a foremost place of pilgrimage in Christendom. In pre-war years, more than 150,000 pilgrims were recorded. Interrupted during the war the traditional septennial event was first tentatively resumed in 1925, but the present one is expected to beat all records in attendance. The relics venerated here will be exhibited for the first time in 21 years. They are said to be the robes of the Virgin Mary; the swaddling clothes of the infant Jesus; the loin cloth worn by Christ on the cross and the cloth that covered the head of St. John the Baptist. They are kept in a marvelous chased silver casket of early 13th century workmanship.

White Cloud, I see you in the skies Like wool, before my eager eyes; You seem to drift along at will Like thistledown, upon the hill; And as I watch you from afar I wonder what you really are.

White Cloud, you look so soft in there Like fur, upon a polar bear; Like wool, in folds you gently fall, Like to a lovely bridal veil; While I keep watching from afar, And wondering what you really are.

White Cloud, as lazily here we lie I on the hill, you in the sky; A little bird I'd like to be With wings to fly right up and see; White Cloud, just what you really are Instead of wondering from afar.

A. Rose MacDougall, Argyle Shore P. E. I.
