

BIRTHS

McNEILL.—At Milton on Dec. 17th to George F. and Mrs. MacNeill, a son.

WATTS.—At York on Dec. 20th to Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Watts, a daughter, weighing 10-1-2 pounds.

Busy Poultry Season

Judging by the amount of business done by the Harris Abattoir Company in this city, the poultry season may be considered a banner one. Between ninety and a hundred thousand pounds of dressed poultry have been handled by this firm within the past week, and during the busy Fall rush, when the live poultry were coming in, seven-teen pickers were employed in the killing department almost constantly night and day. Since the first of December between three and four thousand birds have been shipped from the western end of the island. On Friday morning last the firm shipped 40,000 pounds of poultry on the first Iced Refrigerator Express Car ever seen here. On Tuesday last another Express shipment was made of turkeys, geese and chickens.

SUBSTITUTE FOR GASOLINE.

—Frank Hall, Victoria, a young student, claims to have discovered a cheap substitute for gasoline which may be manufactured totally from three common ingredients, the nature of which he declines to state at present. The cost would be, he stated, twenty-five cents per gallon. Mr. Hall's mixture ran a stationary engine under identical conditions that would have pertained to gasoline, making only a few minor adjustments in the machine.

BRITAIN GIVES DENIAL.—

At the British Embassy it was said that Sir Auckland Geddes, the British Ambassador, would call to the attention of Senator Kellogg, of Minnesota, Chairman of the Senate committee investigating the Irish, an official collection of statements before the committee that British naval intelligence was holding up evidence from the United States. It was also stated by Mr. Woodrow Carlton, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, who said that no censorship was involved in the situation as to Ireland. It was stated at the Embassy that Sir Basil Thomson, of Scotland Yard, had denied that the cablegrams were being subjected to any delay.

THE WOMAN HE MARRIED

BY JANE PHELPS

DICK'S MOTHER IS COMING Chapter 41

I wept a little at Dick's having left me without his customary kiss, but not for long. I was too delighted with the quiet way in which he had taken my running in debt for the dress.

"Now I can wear it in comfort!" I said aloud as I did my morning work.

The postman brought a letter from Chicago. It was from Dick's mother. I knew her handwriting and opened it. I was afraid his father might be worse. But it was just a short note saying his sister and husband were going to go South, and had offered to send her to visit with Dick. She would arrive the following day.

I did not like Dick's mother, but I did like Dick and wanted to make her visit pleasant for his sake. So I scrubbed and cleaned all day long. She would not be able to find fault with my housekeeping. I took Junior with me to the market late in the afternoon, and bought all we would need for two days. I charged everything, and in one place had quite a disagreeable time.

"Can you give me something on account, Mrs. Williams? I am short today," the grocer said.

"No, not today. I will pay my entire bill in a few days and trade elsewhere. I am not accustomed to being dunned." I had learned, you see, not to fear the tradesmen, no longer cringed when they asked for money. I had seen how both Clara and Mildred talked to them. "Oh, don't do that! I didn't mean to offend you. But your bill is pretty large and, as I said, I am short."

I made no reply, but took my bundle and left.

Dick was delighted that his mother was coming. I told him how I had cleaned and worked all day and that in the morning I would bake. He mentioned some of the things his mother particularly liked, and I promised to make them. "You're a brick, Nan!" He kissed me lovingly. "The house looks like a new pin, and Mother will be delighted with it I know."

I had been sorry his mother was coming, but now I was pleased. Dick had forgotten to be angry with me about the dress, in his delight at her visit, and my preparations.

The train got in about 6 o'clock the following afternoon, so Dick met his mother and brought her up. His sister and her husband weren't stopping off.

She was very pleasant and affable all the evening, complimenting me upon my cooking etc. She also seemed very proud of Junior, and made a great fuss over him. Mother heart sank when she said she was going to remain two weeks with us yet. I tried to persuade myself she would remain pleasant and that we should get along famously, as Dick had said we would when she announced her intention.

"The next day everything went all right, although she asked a good many questions regarding our expenses, what rent we paid, etc."

"You pay too much in proportion to Dick's salary," she said. "He told me what he was getting now. And, Nan, you can't afford to set so expensive a table. The cost of food is terrible in Chicago, and I am sure is as much here."

I was so indignant to speak, so made no reply. She said no more perhaps realizing my displeasure. But the next morning when I started for market she offered to go with me. I couldn't very well say I did not want her to, so I dressed Junior and we started out. She interfered with everything I wanted to buy. She watched the scales until the tradesmen were insulted. She argued over everything. Then when she heard me tell them to charge the things, she turned on me. I rushed from the store, but they must have heard a part of what she said.

"I forgot my purse," I told her. "It was only $2. I'll pay it tomorrow."

"Never run in debt, Nan, never! It is like a disease once you start it. Pay for what you have, and what you can't pay for, go without." I was terrible afraid she would tell Dick, and find fault with me. But I must give her her due. She never said one word to him about it, although she did say that she thought we lived extravagantly. Tomorrow--A Box At the Theatre.

Hints for the Motorist

BY ALBERT L. CLOUGH

A. H. W. writes: Recently, my four-cylinder engine has taken to running on three cylinders, cylinder No. 4 not firing. After running for a short time, the plug in this cylinder is found covered with un-evaporated gasoline and gasoline runs out around the valves. The plugs test out all right. What is the trouble?

Answer: Evidently this cylinder becomes flooded with gasoline and, most likely, this is because its plug does not fire, due to its having broken down or to its point adjustment being incorrect. You better try another plug with a 1-32 inch gap. When you start the engine, you doubtless have to use the choke and a great excess of fuel, under which conditions, if a plug fails to fire and thus no gasoline is burned, there is a heavy flooding of the cylinder produced. Sometimes, flooding of the cylinders is caused by the failure of the suction valve of the vacuum tank to close when it should, thus permitting raw gasoline to be sucked directly into the intake. You realize, of course, that a plug may spark properly outside of the cylinder but fail to do so when under compression.

STOPPED UP GREASEWAYS S. write: I have lately had trouble with the grease cups on the ends of the springs and elsewhere. Some of them can be turned with difficulty, even with the pliers, and then the grease does not seem to go where it should, but squeezes out around the cap. I am afraid that some of these bearings are getting dry. What is the cause of this and the remedy?

Answer: Evidently the channels or greaseways in the spring-pins and other parts have become plugged up with hardened lubricant, so that no more can be forced through. Quite likely you have been using too stiff a grease and perhaps have not screwed down the caps often enough. Try this procedure: Remove the cap, clean out the passage as thoroughly as possible with a wire, squirt kerosene into the passage, fill cap with very light grease and turn it down tightly, repeating this operation after a time. If you cannot get grease through in this way, the pins will have to be removed and their grease-ways and those of the bushing cleaned out.

Accuses The Black and Tan

(Special to The Guardian)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Daniel J. Broderick, of Chicago former member of the United States navy who also served in the army bitterly attacked the Black and Tans in Ireland in testifying today before the "Commission Committee of one hundred investigating the Irish question" here. Broderick, who returned recently from a visit to Ireland said the Black and Tans are "wholly without discipline, not responsible to anybody." He claimed to have witnessed pillaging of homes by drunken members of this body, shooting cattle by British soldiers, and wounding of a little girl by the soldiers. He charged that the Black and Tans and R.I.C. used soft nosed bullets for ammunition.

Another witness today was Miss Susannah Walsh, who described the killing of her brother-in-law the late Lord Mayor MacCurran, of Cork. Her sister, Miss Annie Walsh, declared that the boy scouts had been killed by the Black and Tans and that firemen in attempting to suppress a conflagration had been fired upon by the military.

Have You Considered the Additional Service?

Every new telephone adds to the potential value of your telephone.

It is another point you may desire to call some day

It is another possible client or customer able to reach you quickly and conveniently.

When the present schedule of rates went into effect, there were only 866 telephone subscribers connected to our system.

To-day our records show that there are 3707 telephones in use in this province.

2841 ADDITIONAL customers or clients placed next door to you by telephone.

When the full facts of the telephone rate situation are understood and the additional value considered, there are few, we believe, who will question the fairness of the proposed new schedule.
