THE AIRMAN IN A BARRAGE

The Observer has seen his bombs burst among the buildings of the factory, and he knows that the explosions will be followed almost immediately by a hostile demonstration. He is, still leaning over the front of the machine, watching the clouds of smoke among the roofs which he has destroyed, when he sees rushing upwards from the ground chains of luminous green balls, which pass in front and one either side of him. He does not trouble about these, for with the first bursting of the bombs the great searchlights have leaped from the ground and are sweeping the whole sky near him, making it all of light and illuminating the machine, although they have not touched him. Some of the beams pass within a few feet of him—blinding lanes of white light, seeming almost tangible.

"At the same time he sees four quick, red flashes in one place near the town followed by several others in different positions, as battery after battery comes into action to start a barrage over the factory and its vicinity.

He waits . . . and almost begins to count. Suddenly he sees a brilliant red flash near the machine, and another and another, and hears the sharp crack! crack! of the bursting shells. On the ground now the flashes are incessant, and the shells burst all around him as he passes through the screen of explosives. Round puffs of smoke float past him, and he can see them dotted all over the sky—white in the moonlight.

It seems to be passing through a cauldron of fire. Searchlights are everywhere; the sky is split with them in a dozen different directions as they cross and re-cross, forever locking for him. Hundreds of green balls, like sparkling necklaces of emeralds, come soaring by the wings, leaving their trails of smoke, and the red flashes of the shells light up the machine as they burst around it.

The excitement is intoxicating. It seems unreal and exotic, yet somehow he is not frightened. He almost wants to shout with the wonder of it all. To move amid such a sea of light and fire moving and flashing and rushing past him, amid such an explosion of hatred and of the desire to find him out and destroy him, and yet to pass through it unscathed, is fascinating.

If he had seen all that terrible array of searchlights and that wall of bursting shells before him as he approached his objective he would probably have suffered from a great fear, for anticipation is the best friend of terror. But now that it has started around him, as he has to pass through it in order to get away, the effects is very different—mental and physical excitement overcome all the suggestions of reason, and fear is overwhelmed by a kind of ecstasy.

Meanwhile the machine is getting very near the ground, but he knows that if the engine has started, the results will be disastrous for the whole of the enemy weapons—searchlights, shells, machine gun fire, green balls—at present scattered, will be concentrated upon him and his downfall will be almost certain.

At last he looks back over the tail of the machine and sees the searchlight of light sufficiently far behind him to be harmless. The Pilot ruts on the engines and speaks to him.

"Well! That was hot! How did you do, old man?"

"All right! Hit the place, anyway! Glad it's all over, aren't you? What about some of your chocolate?"

LARGEST HOTEL IN THE WORLD
 (New York Herald)

A new hotel which in size will be the largest in the world and which will tower above any other building in New York with the exception of the Woolworth building, will be placed under construction on the site of the present Murray Hill Hotel, in the Grand Central Terminal zone, as quickly as the Murray Hill, itself a structure of seven hundred rooms and ten stories high, can be razed.

Announcement of this gigantic building was made yesterday by John McE. Bowman, president of the company that now owns and operates every large hotel surrounding the Grand Central Terminal—the Biltmore, Manhattan, Belmont, Commodore, which is under construction, and the Murray Hill itself. The Murray Hill and Belmont only last Sunday were added to the other three big hotels under Mr. Bowman's control.

The main structure of the New Murray Hill, which name it will carry, will be thirty-two stories high, and from its centre will rise a great tower which will be a distinctive note in the sky line of New York city. Located as it will be on the summit of Murray Hill, the new hotel will overtop all other buildings in the city except the one, and may be seen from any part of the city or from the harbor.

The plot of ground on which it will stand, will combine the site of the present Murray Hill Hotel with additional property on Fortieth street owned by Mr. B. L. M. Bates, who is a member of the company headed by Mr. Bowman. The lot will contain 37,000 square feet.

Since the new Commodore Hotel, with its twenty-eight stories, has been under construction it has been halved throughout the world in news articles and magazine stories as the largest, finest and most unusual hotel in the world. Many men predicted that no other structure ever would be erected for that purpose to equal it.

Underground subway passages will connect the New Murray Hill building with each of the other hotels of the Bowman interests and will connect with the Grand Central Terminal direct. There will be 800 windows on the south, all of the rooms overlapping other buildings. Another 200 windows will face southward in the north part of the building. Each of the rooms of the hotel will be unusually large, following out an idea of Mr. Bates, who conceived the structure, and each will have a bath.

There will be restaurants on the main floor and a restaurant on the top floor, a grand ballroom larger than any other in the world and a roof garden. An observatory will surround

THE ROLLING CRUTCH

A "Rolling crutch" is described in "The New York Medical Journal." It is pointed out that "when a step is taken with the common crutch, the tip remains at a fixed point on the ground and the shoulder passes through an arc, the radius of which is the crutch. Thus the shoulder rises and then falls."

A rolling crutch, then, is one designed to make the shoulder progress forward in an almost straight and horizontal line.

"The rolling crutch is the ordinary crutch to the bottom of which a thin double flanged iron rod from fourteen to thirty-nine inches long is attached and braced by one or two quarter-inch steel rods on either side. The curve of the metal arc is that of a circle with a radius equal to the length of the crutch. The arc is three-quarters of an inch in width and is covered with a piece of non-skid bicycle tire.

"The advantages of this form of crutch are many: the motion at the shoulder is in the direction of progress and not up and down; a longer step is possible with the same length of crutch; a more direct support is given at all stages of the step; the arms participate directly in the whole of the forward step; a better angle with the ground is secured; the crutch is more secure; reaching is largely eliminated and there is less singing in soft earth or snow.

"By means of an extra metal handle projecting at the level of the regular handle the patient can make the crutch either retard his progress down hill or aid going up hill. Among the disadvantages are its somewhat greater weight, greater expense more complicated construction, and its tendency to be in the way in crowded places.

"This last has been somewhat overcome in the crutches with a long metal arc by making the two ends so that they can be folded up. The same principle has been applied to pernael rutches, foot extensions, leg braces, artificial legs, and even canes with advantage in all."
