W.C.T.U. NOTES
TODAY MAKES TOMORROW
Life is like a stretch of fabric. Woven slowly day by day; Every deed goes in the texture. Every word we think or say

Let us build the framework firmly. Plan the pattern with a care. For 'tis character we're weaving. In the fabric growing there.

In the texture of the morrow Will appear the life to-day. Golden gleam the threads of service. Patience silvers o'er the gray.

Red are deeds of truth and honor. Steadfast courage shines in blue. It is ours to make that fabric. Grows in colors strong and true. —The War Cry.

Ear Marks of a True Disciple

Many thoughtful Israelites were asking questions about Christ's Kingdom such as: What are its laws? What kind of people live in it? What is its relation to the Law of Moses? The Sermon on the Mount was designed to answer these questions. The following are the ear marks of a true disciple:

- (1) The humble — Blessed are the poor in spirit means to have a vision of God's greatness and of our own smallness.
- (2) The mourners—Blessed are they that mourn for they shall be comforted. This does not apply to those who sorrow over worldly losses but to those who shed tears of repentance and gratitude.
- (3) The meek—Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth. A meek person is one who, with God's strength, has conquered his greatest enemy — himself — so that when insulted he does not fight back.
- (4) The spiritually hungry — Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled. Those who would rather be godly than rich, clever or popular, shall have their desire granted.
- (5) Mercifulness — Blessed are the merciful for they shall obtain mercy. To be merciful means to be pitiful, kind, forgiving, slow to condemn, ready to make allowances.
- (6) Purity of heart — Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God. The heart is pure when it loves only what it ought to love. Sin clouds the heart which is the window through which we look at God.
- (7) The peacemakers — Blessed are the Peacemakers for — Blessed are they who seek peace and pursue it. Great need for such in this day and age.
- (8) The persecuted for righteousness — Blessed are these. We do not need to seek persecution for if we follow Christ consistently we are sure to have persecution of some kind. This is the constitution of the Kingdom. We are told to rejoice and exult when we are reviled and persecuted because our reward is great in the heavens.

ENTIRE FAMILY KILLED BY DRUNKEN DRIVER

Five members of the Jantz family were wiped out in a "drunk-driver" accident near Boise, Idaho, recently. A passenger in the drunken driver's car was also killed. The driver of the car which killed these people was held on a manslaughter charge. He had been drinking in a number of bars and beer bottles were strewn about the wreckage of his car.

The picture of the victims shows father, mother and three fine girls — just a typical American family. Has your family missed a similar fate by a hair's breadth? Have you done anything to help stop this beer and whisky slaughter on our highways?

"The whole purpose behind all liquor propaganda is money — not your happiness, your success, your popularity, your health, but money. And no deception is too great if it can make money. It is not hard to agree with Gene Tunney's statement on his retirement from the Distilled Spirits Institute a few years ago: "The Institute is without social conscience or soul." That was plain talk by an insider, not an outsider, a prize fighter, not a preacher." —Forward.

With a Scouting career dating back to 1910, Ernest F. Mills became Executive Commissioner for Training at Canadian Scout Headquarters in 1946, after serving as Executive Commissioner for the Province of Manitoba from 1927.

Mr. Mills is a native of Tynninghame, Scotland, and came to this country following his education at Knox Institute Grammar School. He was first employed by the Dominion Bank in Toronto and Winnipeg until the first World War in which he served with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces. In 1918 he was appointed Field Secretary for the Boy Scouts Association, but later returned for a three year period with the Dominion Bank, and served with a well known western grain firm for four years before accepting office with the Manitoba Provincial Council of the Boy Scouts Association in 1927.

His Scouting career goes back to his appointment as Assistant Scoutmaster of the 3rd East Lothian Troop in 1910. In Canada he served as Assistant Scoutmaster and Scoutmaster of the 9th Winnipeg Troop. For some time he served as a District Scoutmaster in Winnipeg, and for meritorious service to the Movement was awarded the Medal of Merit. In 1922 he was named Assistant District Commissioner for Rover Scouts, and in 1926 was awarded his Gilwell Wood Badge. In 1929 was one of the leaders of the Canadian Contingent to the "Coming of Age" World Jamboree at Birkenhead, England.

In 1930 Mr. Mills was named a Deputy Camp Chief, and in 1946 Lord Rowallan, Chief Scout of the Commonwealth and Empire presented him with the Silver Acorn, second highest award for service to Scouting.

Upon the reorganization of Canadian Headquarters in 1946 Mr. Mills was invited to become Executive Commissioner for Training. As such he attended the Imperial Gilwell Courses in England in 1947 and accompanied the Dominion Commissioner, Mr. Jackson Dodds, to the meetings of the International Conference at the Training Centre Course near

Happy-Go-Lucky

By Mrs. Harry Pugh Smith

"The Chief is sending me down to New York," he explained. "The town's full of reporters from the big papers, but the Associated Press wants me to bring the Kelly story in myself."

Barbara's heart ached wildly as Tony hurried her outside. "I'll have to send you home in a taxi, sugar," he explained. "I've got to catch the eight-ten to New York. You don't mind?"

"It's all right," she said, and thanked God that her voice was steady.

Tony was hailing a cab. He put her inside and paid the driver. The window was down on her side. Tony stood there looking in at her. "They've got to give me three days off next weekend to make up for this," he said, and grinned at her crookedly. "Three days ought to be enough for a couple like us to get married."

"Married!" gasped Barbara. Tony wriggled his shoulders. He looked away and then he looked back at Barbara and his eyes were a little desperate. "You'll probably live to regret it," he said, "but I hope you're game. I mean, if you'll take a chance on me, I'll be tickled pink."

"Oh, Tony!"

"We should be able to take a small honeymoon on five hundred dollars," he said in a muffled voice. Barbara's heart was pounding in her throat. "Are you proposing to me, Tony?" she stammered.

"Yep," muttered Tony, "and making a terrible flop of it. I always thought I wasn't a marrying man. Only now I want to get married. How I want to! That is, I want to marry you. Will you?"

"Yes, Tony," she whispered.

"Gee," breathed Tony, "am I happy?" He flung a distracted glance at the clock in front of the jeweler's down the street, thrust his head in at the taxi window and kissed Barbara swiftly. "Heck, it's three minutes to train time! So long, sugar, I—I'll be seeing you."

"G-good-bye, Tony, d-darling," faltered Barbara.

But Tony was already tearing down the street in his battered flivver, leaning out to wave frantically at her as he took the corner on two wheels.

CHAPTER III

She and Tony were engaged; they were going to be married! It seemed incredible to Barbara and yet, somehow, it was the rightest thing that had ever happened to her. It was as if everything which had gone before had been merely leading up to the moment when Tony asked her to be his wife. As if her whole life had focused at that instant, so that at last she knew why she was born.

Tony telephoned her from the station. The train was ten minutes late. It would be, he groaned. He said he had so much to tell her. He said he didn't know why he was so fussed around her. "My tongue ties itself in knots," he confessed ruefully. "What makes it so funny, I could always say sweet nothings to girls I didn't give a darn about. Explain that if you can, Miss West."

He said he would write her from New York. He said he would have to hang up because some of the gang from the office were there, giving him the razz. "Take good care of yourself, kid," he said. "You kind of make all the difference to me."

"You don't exactly stand for nothing in my life," retorted Barbara.

Tony laughed. "You can't make me mad; that way, sugar," he said. "Good-bye."

He is sweet; he is the sweetest thing in the world, thought Barbara after she had gone upstairs to her room. She was willing to admit that Tony had faults, but they were lovable faults. To offset them he was generous and genuinely kind, especially to people less fortunate than himself, and he was loyal. It was Tony who had taken up a collection in the office to send the janitor's little boy to the sanitarium at Warm Springs, Georgia. And there was an old woman out at the Old Ladies' Home whom Tony went to see once a month because she had worked for his mother years before.

Barbara was a little disconcerted when she reached the office the next morning to find that the news of her engagement had preceded her. Tony had told the gang at the station. They said he had been walking on air. They said he acted as if he had come into a fortune and could not keep it to himself.

It was apparent right from the start that neither her friends nor Tony's believed their marriage would work out. People told Barbara that she was too practical and matter-of-fact to be happy married to a harum-scarum like Tony Blake. They said she ought to marry someone like Martin Fagg. Martin agreed with them. He had been intending to ask Barbara to marry him for some time. "I was just waiting till I paid my business out and got a little money ahead," he told Barbara reproachfully. "I thought you knew that."
