DEFEAT OF THE SHAMROCK

Yachtsmen do not Attach any Importance to the Trial.

The defeat of Shamrock II. by the old Shamrock came something as a surprise to the followers of yachting on this side of the water. It would have been more in accordance, with the "eternal fitness of things" if the new boat had made the old one look like three dimes.—Boston Traveller.

The London Times, referring to the race, says:

Yachtsmen generally think that no importance is to be attached to the trial between the two Shamrocks. It was blowing hard, according to the reports, and the sea was running high. The old Shamrock is a tried boat and was able to race under the conditions while the new Shamrock has not had enough sails to stretch her rigging, and it would have been folly to have pushed her under the circumstances.

It takes several trials to get the rigging taut, on a big yacht said a member of the New Yacht Club last night, and with the standing gear in the condition that the challenger's must have been it would have been courting disaster to have pushed her to beat the older boat. I doubt very much if those in charge of the yachts were racing at all. Probably they were out sailing and the stiff blow was just what they wanted. If the challenger had been driven hard she might have carried away something and the damage been so great that her chances would have been spoiled at once.

Another thing the yachts were not sailing over any measured course. They were started by the Erin and after sailing for a time they received a signal from the steamer to stop I think it was a trial similar to those sailed by the Columbia and Defender off Newport before those yachts met in a race, and only those in charge of the two boats really knew what was being done. All the Shamrock II's standing gear is new. In her trial last week she buckled her gaff, so that she either had a new one or the old one repaired and it would not have been wise to have risked that being injured again. Then she has a new sail on, that is, if the new canvas was ready. If not she had on the ill-fitting one which she used in her former spins, so that it is easily seen that she was not in anything like trim for a hard race.

"We must wait until the yacht meet over a regular course before we can estimate the speed of the new yacht, and even then she may be held back, so that no one except those in charge can tell what she is capable of doing."

In Memoriam.

At Irishtown, on Tuesday, May 7, Michael A. Ready, blacksmith, was called from this world of toil and care to enjoy the reward of a well-spent life.

He was a man of robust constitution and in the prime of life, having just completed his forty-fifth year, and as his illness was of short duration, his death came as a severe shock to the community. About two weeks previous he contracted a slight cold which gradually developed into pneumonia and heart trouble and in spite of all that tender nursing could do and medical skill could accomplish, he succumbed to the inevitable, fortified by the strengthening graces of the last sacraments. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn a loss that no human efforts can ever repair. His life was made up, in unbroken succession, of good work that aimed at domestic happiness, social union, and religious perfection. His calling brought him in contact with people of all classes and creeds and with all he was deservedly popular. His life was indeed, a true impersonation of the admirable character so well portrayed in Longfellow's poem "The Village Blacksmith." The writer can well remember how, when returning from school, he "looked in at the open door," and later how he spent many a pleasant hour in friendly argumentation or casual conversation. His dealings with men were marked by a keen sense of honesty and justice. He possessed an intellect of wonderful scope and comprehensiveness, the operations of which were displayed equally well in literary acquirements and mechanical experience. The nature of his work kept him in touch with many inventors of modern times and his work in this connection ever displayed the hand of the master mechanic. An expert in every line of work of so extensive a calling, he built up an immense trade commanding one of the largest and best areas on the Island to-day. In this he has left a void that none can fill. Others may follow, but none can truly succeed. Indelibly impressed on the mind is the genial smile with which one was always greeted, and engraven on the heart are the many acts of kindness that he constantly performed. His erudition was phenomenal, when one considers the few spare moments he had for reading. He was a close student of history, and kept thoroughly versed in the movements and objects of governments and nations. A Canadian of optimistic type, he could see nothing for Canada but a future of undreamed of prosperity while he believed our dear Island the most favored of God's creation.

In society he was an active worker. He became, in 1895, a member of Branch 254 C. M. B. A. Kensington and in a brief space his faculty for business and his keen and logical debating powers won the admiration of all the members. He was soon elected Recording Secretary and later President of the Branch. "He was also a member of the Emerald Branch, B. I. S.

In education he took a deep and lively interest and his sincerity was evident by always supporting the vote of large supplement to proficient teachers. In fact any cause he espoused or any work he undertook, ever found him an active and enthusiastic supporter. So completely engrossed was he in the work in hand that his whole being was often completely absorbed, which left him oblivious to all his surroundings. In conclusion, it may be said that he was a man whose every thought and action tended to the improvement of mankind and aimed at erecting a monument of good works that shall not be destroyed. No better proof of the respect in which he was held can be adduced than the procession of over one hundred carriages that followed his body to the grave. Very pretty wreaths were laid upon the coffin by Branch 254, C. M. B. A. and by Miss Celia Murphy and Miss Maggie Higgins. An immense concourse assembled at the house on Thursday morning May 9th inst. to pay their last respects to the dead. Even a disinterested observer could not but notice how painful was the sad duty they had come to perform and how each countenance expressed the thought that was told in whispers "who shall be next." The pall-bearers were Messrs. John Bernard, James Bell, George McLeod, Andrew McLeod, John Campbell, John O'Halloran. The members of Branch 254, C. M. B. A. and representatives from Branches 215 Summerside, 281 Tignish, and 338 Hope River, and the members of Emerald Branch B. I. S. in regalia headed the procession, which, before it reached the church, extended fully a mile in length. Large funerals may have entered St. Mary's Cemetery, Indian River, but never any so grand and so impressive. A solemn mass of Requiem was sung by Mgr. D. J. Gillis and amid sobs and lamentations his body was committed to the earth to await a glorious union with the soul in heaven. On Sunday Mgr. Gillis paid a glowing tribute to the deceased, showing how he was a sober, industrious, honest, and God-fearing man, and deeply regretted the loss of so good a parishioner. But the will of God must be done; our loss is his gain.

NEW PIPE ORGAN

Placed in Grace Church Tested Last Night.

MUSICIANS PRESENT A CAR STRIKE VICTIM. The Instrument Pronounced an Excellent one—It will be Used To-morrow.

At 6.30 last evening we had the pleasure of hearing Prof Watts test the new pipe organ recently purchased by Grace Methodist Church, from Messrs. Miller Brothers, the well known musical instrument dealers of this city, who represent the Karn-Warren Co. of Woodstock Ont. Mr. Charles Warren, the Superintendent of their pipe organ department, is one of the oldest pipe organ builders in Canada, having learned the business from his father, who for many years carried on a large business, if not the largest in Canada in this line.

We learn that the Karn-Warren Co. have built within the past few years a large number of pipe organs, placed in all parts of Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, among the most prominent of their late constructions being the large three manual organ for the Church of St. James the Apostle of Montreal.

Grace Church is to be congratulated upon securing their organ from such a well-known firm, and their agents here, Messrs. Miller Brothers, are certainly to be commended for their push and energy, in importing the organ and setting it up in the Church without the aid or assistance of any persons from the factory. This is a new feature of the music business for this Province, and it is a satisfaction to know that we have among our own people, those capable of setting up a pipe organ without the aid of expert help from abroad.

The outside appearance of the organ is certainly artistic and the decoration of the front pipes harmonizes beautifully with the tinting of the interior of the edifice.

The case of the organ is finished in antique quartered oak. The ornamental front pipes are supported by four massive columns or pillars, handsomely carved and embellished. The sides of the case are panelled to match and the whole exterior of the instrument presents a beautiful appearance from the auditorium.

The choir platform has been altered to accommodate the new organ, and fitted with a neat and appropriate railing. The seating capacity for the choir has been enlarged and as constructed a modern in every regard.

The organ is a double manual with with pedal bass, with eleven speaking stops and six mechanical registers. The organ possesses ample tone for the church. The stops are well voiced, the flute, oboe and stopped diapason on the great especially so. The difference in size taken into account, the organ compares very favorably with its sister organs in town.

In tone, volume and design the organ is a credit to the church and the enterprise of Grace Church a matter for emulation by all churches unpossessed of a modern kind of instrument.

The organ will be used for the first time to-morrow morning. Miss Duchemin will preside and excellent results may be looked for.
