WHAT HAPPENED AT MONTALBAN

By PETER BENDICT

"But surely—she was of medium size, wasn't she? I can't take a giant to pick her up like that on my arm, carry her to the window and throw her down?"

"Don't think the carrying was necessary," he told her. "It was a moonlight night. I can think of nothing more natural than that she should be at her window, looking out over the lake. Whoever killed her had only to give one hefty lift over the low sill, and it was done."

"And the police think so, too?"

"I gather that's what they think. A woman could have done it. Not a shrimp like Barbara, but any well-made, strong woman, with enough determination to help her over it."

"And exactly why, Molly asked presently, 'did they pick on Ralph?'"

"It was his name," he said. "He had as much and as little money as the rest. Certainly she'd done her best to drive him out of his mind, and there was the beautiful centrepiece of their matrimonial life—course—Exhibit A, Ralph's dress-link swinging merrily in the torn window curtain in Mallia's room. He didn't deny he'd swung her into it, but he said his visit was at about a quarter to one, and he'd come away after a wife's room. His wife had a headache, and no aspirin; so he came to Mallia, as the nearest possible source, to borrow some. He saw that she had a dressing-table, combing her hair, and she waved him to a bottle of aspirin standing on a table near the window, and he went on to his room. Which he did. He said the window was wide open and the curtains were streaming into the room and over the table. He said he had caught his link in them and torn it loose until afterwards."

"Barbara bore out everything he said about the time he left her room and the time he returned, which she goes to show that he was back with the aspirin something like twelve minutes before Mallia screamed. If Barbara's telling the truth, but you know what dotting wives are."

"She wouldn't be the most convincing witness ever," agreed Molly with reluctant smiles. "But you know that's all right. She can't do anything to help her. There was no other corroborative evidence whatever. All people could say was that Barbara had gone to bed at eight, and that she had followed her maids ten minutes later. And that he'd turned up, after a slight delay, still half-dressed at ten minutes past eight, the scene of the discovery of the body. So Ralph was arrested, and you know what a jury could rightly do with the evidence against him. And that's all about it."

CHAPTER VI MR. SEVERN'S OPINION

Molly looked up, not without repugnance, at the window, at which all this coil had revolved, the window which had flaunted Ralph's cut-link from its curtain, and looking down unweary upon him, she said, "Whatever this unfortunate Mallia had been, it was scarcely justice to forget that she had been a nurse. Not only that, but she had accounts, it sounded as if she collected seals as schoolboys collected stamps, and for malvolent love of her invalid slaves, but of those who valued them."

"I'm like the police," she said suddenly. "I think you're keeping back quite a lot you could tell if you chose."

"I don't go about with my eyes closed," admitted Severn.

"Nor I. You were in the library. Now the library happens to be at the right side of the house, and you heard more than you may have heard from any other source. The door openings and closings of Mallia's door. Besides, you'd have to pass her door and stand in the corner of the corridor to get to the library. Who was upstairs first?"

"The police asked me all those questions," said Severn.

"And the answers were all the same. 'Yes, I passed her door on my way to the library. Yes, her door was closed, and there was no sound from inside. I was not in the library, and you expect? Her beauty would occupy her for more than half an hour at night, I imagine. I went into the library, and I heard the scream I heard nothing, no opening or closing of doors, no voices. Those were the answers,'" she asked, without undue concern.

"I think not. You already know of one piece of information I could have given the police and didn't. I mean the quarrel between Charles and Ralph. No, Charles didn't confide in them, either. Charles was gone at the time the body was found, and I tell you all about it, and say that of course it had nothing to do with the case, and naturally the rift was not very serious. The general opinion was he killed her. And expect you to believe it, yes. Unlike the rest of the family, of course—but then, the children of this generation are notoriously wiser than children of light. However, after he'd thrown me in I made it clear to him that the police were not so trusting as he thought, and he held his tongue about Ralph."

"And now about the library. Mallia left the hall. I think soon after twelve. She was upstairs before me. What I didn't mention was that I went upstairs with Charles. His room is dead centre of the house. From only three doors from Mallia's, I hadn't told him I was going to sit up and read, and no doubt he imagined I was going straight to bed. At any rate, just as we came to the head of the stairs was Ralph disappearing into Mallia's room. It was glimpse enough to be sure of him. I don't know what I said to pass it off, but I know I hit a shot at it, and very little success."

"Now I told you Charles had a temper. He was trembling with rage when he never said a word. He just opened the door of his room, and went in, and shut me out."

"So Ralph was lying about the time he went to Mallia's room," said Molly.

"Yes, he was lying."

"And I suppose you got Charles to keep quiet for Ralph's sake?"

"We concocted a peaceful story which no one else in the house could contradict. We went upstairs separately; we dreamed no dreams. Molly was silent for a few moments, considering the complexities of dealing with such a household, and feeling some sympathy with the

Dorothy Dix Says—

ENTHUSIASM RANKS HIGH AS CHARM WOMAN MUST POSSESS

With It She Can Go As Far As She Desires In 'Being Popular Or Being A Successful Wife'

If I were asked what I thought was the greatest charm a woman can possess, I should say ENTHUSIASM. Yet, strangely enough, that is never mentioned in the category of feminine attractions. We hear a lot about women's beauty, something about their intelligence, a little about their amiability, but no one ever says anything about liking to be with Mary or Jane because they are so enthusiastic. Yet, above all others, that is the quality that draws us to a woman. She must have features as regular as a Grecian statue, but if she had a dead-pan face we pass her by without a second glance. She may be a college graduate, with half the letters of the alphabet under her belt, but if she is nothing but a female bookworm, without life or sparkle, we avoid her if we can. She may be as sweet as honey and as innocuous as mush and milk, but nobody wants to be a second helping of her society. No, what we like is the enthusiastic woman who is alive and alert, who is interested in everything and everybody, who radiates hope and optimism and who has the ability to make us feel that we are in the presence of a kind of girl who always has plenty of dates because she makes every boy who takes her out think that he is giving her the time of her life, and that he is a swell guy. She enjoys everything whole-heartedly, whether it is a party or a symphony concert. She can be just as much fun at a cheap dance hall as she can at a swanky night club, and she never lets a boy down, or makes him feel flat and small and as if he had wasted his time and his money on her. She never lets a boy down, or makes him feel flat and small and as if he had wasted his time and his money on her. She never lets a boy down, or makes him feel flat and small and as if he had wasted his time and his money on her.

She never lets a boy down, or makes him feel flat and small and as if he had wasted his time and his money on her. She never lets a boy down, or makes him feel flat and small and as if he had wasted his time and his money on her. She never lets a boy down, or makes him feel flat and small and as if he had wasted his time and his money on her.

She Helps Her Husband

The enthusiastic woman makes the wife who turns even a mediocre husband into a success, because she believes in him so completely that she has to get busy to help him. She stimulates him with her own high spirits. She builds up his ego by her admiration. She makes him feel that he is a big man, and he will do great things.

Enthusiasm is as catching as the measles, and the woman who is enthusiastic ever has her husband's admiration. She stimulates him with her own high spirits. She builds up his ego by her admiration. She makes him feel that he is a big man, and he will do great things.

They Hold Their Husbands

More than that, it is the enthusiastic wives who hold their husbands, for there is no other one thing that will more certainly cause a man to lose his taste for his wife to whom he is married than for her to turn into an unresponsive, flabby creature who has lost all her sparkle and emotion left in it.

"The kind of wife you know, who turns the back of her ear to her husband's kisses and tells him not to muss up her hair—of which she feels affectionate; who acts like an early Christian martyr when he takes her out to any place of amusement; who always accuses her husband of something else, and who never under any circumstances shows any measure of sympathy."

A Morning Smile

TOO SMART
 A schoolboy at lunch time entered a grocery store and said to the clerk: "Take this order, Ten pounds sugar at 6 cents, 11 pounds coffee at 25 cents, 8 pounds tea at 30 cents. Add that up, how much is it?"

The clerk replied "$5.75."

"Are you sure?" asked the boy.

"Of course I am sure."

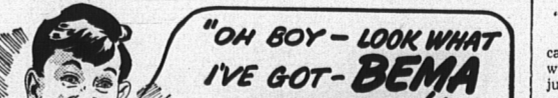

The boy thanked him and said: "That's my arithmetic lesson for tomorrow."

A DOUBTER

Elderly Aunt (to her nephew, a poor preacher)—James, why did you enter the ministry?

"Because I was called," he answered.

"James," said the old lady, anxiously, as she looked up from wiping her spectacles, "are you sure I wasn't some other noise you heard?"

THE COOK'S CORNER

ORANGE BREAD

This quick bread is excellent to serve either plain or buttered. Delicious for afternoon tea and equally good for the broiler's lunch box or after-school snack.

4 cups sifted pastry flour
 1-2 tsp. baking powder
 1 tsp. salt
 4 tbsp. shortening, part butter may be used
 1-2 cup sugar
 1 egg, well beaten
 Grated rind 1 large orange
 1-2 cup orange marmalade
 1-2 cup chopped walnuts
 1-4 to 1-3 cups milk

Sift the flour and measure and then sift several times with the baking powder and salt. Cream the shortening and add the sugar and then add the egg, which has been beaten till light and lemon colored. Beat well till the mixture is light and fluffy. Add the grated orange rind and the marmalade and chopped walnuts. Combine... Then add the sifted dry ingredients alternately with the milk. Give a few quick beats at the end. Pour into a greased and floured loaf pan. Allow to stand for about 20 minutes before baking. Place in a 350 deg. F. oven for about 30 to 60 minutes or till done.

BROILERS TARTARE

Split, wash and dry three broilers of about a pound and a half each, says America's Cook Book; sprinkle with salt and pepper, and saute in one-half cup butter until browned on both sides. Add 6 sprigs parsley chopped, 4 scallions, chopped, 1-4 clove garlic, chopped, and 3-4 pound mushrooms, sliced; cover and cook slowly until chicken is tender, turning occasionally; allow twenty to thirty minutes for cooking. Remove chicken, roll in the stale crumbs and place under broiler until the crumbs are browned, turning frequently. Serve with brown sauce made from drippings and vegetables in pan and 6-8 let stock. Yield, six portions.

Your Dreams Expose Suppressed Worries

"Crazy" Dream May Have Sense

Imagine dreaming you're in a canoe with your boss—and, if that weren't unlikely enough, seeing him jump into the lake with you. It's hard to believe such "crazy" dreams mean anything, but the psychologists say that when you understand them as expressions of your subconscious they can actually help solve your problems.

This canoe dream was dreamed by a girl who had suppressed a bitter dislike for her job. When told her dream pictured the common phrase "Go jump in the lake," she realized that, for her own happiness, she should adapt herself to her work.

Other dreams may express your subconscious fears and desires in images or symbols. A dream of going into a dark place often symbolizes marriage.

Some dreams are clear warnings from our inner selves. A dream of a tooth extraction may mean you long to break off some tender relationship. Better do it, the dream warns, or be sorry.

Our 32-page booklet gives you scientific explanations of many dreams and dream symbols; helps unmask your inner worries; discusses sex dreams, dreams that "come true."

LOOK OUT FOR YOUR LIVER

Buck it up right now and feel like a million!

Your liver is the largest organ in your body and most important to your health. It pours out bile to digest food, gets rid of waste, supplies new energy, allows proper nourishment to reach your blood. When your liver gets out of order, food decomposes in your intestines. You become constipated, stomach and kidneys don't work properly. You feel "rotten"—headache, lackluster, dizzy, dragged out all the time.

For over 35 years thousands have won prompt relief from these ills—with Fruit-a-tives. So can you now. Try Fruit-a-tives—will be simply delighted how quickly you'll feel like a new person, happy and well again. 25c. 50c. Condon's Largest Selling Liver Tonic.

FRUIT-A-TIVES

Use a damp dust sheet to beat your suite indoors in the winter; throw the sheet over the chair and then beat through it with a stick; the dust sticks to the sheet instead of decorating the room.

Clean your skin rings with a mixture of dry 5 per cent anti-fresh chalk (provided they are white or pale in colour); rub it well in and then beat the rings with a cane. For bad stains make a mixture of magnesia and starch powder; apply and then roll the rug up for two days before shaking and combing.

YOUR FURNITURE'S AS CLEAN AS YOUR DISHES

Your shining wood surfaces will never be a bit cleaner than the cloths with which they are polished. Frequent washing of dusters eliminates cancer of gray furniture. Once a week gather up and soak the soiled dusters in a pint of strong warm suds. If it's washday, they may be put in the wash; in the suds that are left from the last tub of clothes. After washing, ring well and dry in the sunshine. If dusters are made from discarded clothing cut out thick seams but not anything which might scratch the surfaces to be dusted. Neat squares are handiest. Over-
