ST. JOHN, Nov. 4.—Inquiries made throughout the city failed to reveal a single grocer who was selling sugar at twelve cents a pound, the price fixed by the Board of Commerce. Some were selling at thirteen, but more at fourteen. Wholesalers have no supplies, but the refineries promise deliveries by the end of the week.

DADDY LONG LEGS AT PRINCE EDWARD

Delightful Photoplay Screened Yesterday and Repeated Today.

One of the best things which have been seen in moving pictures in Charlottetown was "Daddy Long Legs" shown here for the first time yesterday afternoon and last evening before audiences which certainly showed appreciation. It was a treat to be in the Prince Edward at the matinee yesterday when the audience was composed mostly of children to hear how the little ones laughed at the many very funny situations which abound throughout the story.

This wonderful production is filled with the most delicate and artistic imagery throughout. One of the most effective incidents deals with a comparison of the roaring of Judy Abbott, the orphan asylum girl, and Angelica Wyckoff, a spoiled rich child. Judy, (Miss Pickford) the little girl who, despite cruel treatment and bad living conditions in the asylum, brings sunshine and aid to the smaller children is symbolized by a lily, rising from a dumping ground for old rubbish. Angelica is symbolized as a hot house rose, beautiful because of intense cultivation, but unable to stand the rigors of the ordinary outdoors.

There is a pretty bit showing the court of Dan Cupid who sends forth his emissaries to see that Judy falls in love. Babies, whimsically clad with wings and thin ankles, play the part of Cupid's attendants. The master stroke of directional genius takes place in the scene showing the death of an orphan baby, who had not had proper care in the asylum, and who dies in the arms of Judy.

One of the most humorous bits is that in which Judy and a freckle-faced little boy decide to loan orphans in a "prune strike". Outwitted by the matron they are driven into the yard without food. They find a jug of hard cider and some sandwiches which, innocently enough they consume, whereupon they both become gay, and get into all sorts of mischief.

This delightful picture will be repeated at both shows today at the Prince Edward.

Theodore Roosevelt As Secretary Saw Him

That old aphorism that no man is a hero to his own valet was properly met by Carlyle, who remarked that we ought not to have the minds of valets. Nevertheless, it is the general experience of public characters that those who come most intimately into contact with them have the least respect for them. A striking instance to the contrary is provided by Miss Josephine Stricker, who was Theodore Roosevelt's confidential secretary in the last years of his life. He was indeed a hero to her, she says in an article in the New York Tribune, for he was of that rare greatness of soul that the closer you came to him the bigger he loomed, like a mountain. He was not a poseur; those who formed their opinion of him from his public life would find him exactly the same sort of man in private life. He practiced his doctrine of Americanism in his home. His relations with his wife and children were ideal. A kinder, more unselfish father never lived. Wherever his home was there was his heart.

The Kind Employer. When Miss Stricker was recommended to him as his private secretary, she was in despair at having to confess that she had forgotten all the shorthand she ever knew, and that would be necessary for her to learn it over again. "Well," he smiled, "we'll be patient with each other while you brush up on it, and I know it won't be long before you are an expert." His morning mail averaged about two hundred letters a day, and such a thing as an unanswered letter was unknown to Col. Roosevelt. Even toward the last, when he was in almost constant pain, he insisted that the day's mail should be answered on that day, though his secretary suggested that it might be left over till the morning. He said, "Miss Stricker, when I was president, I instituted a rule to clear my desk each day of the day's work, and I shall stick to it." This, she adds, was the nearest approach to a rebuke that she ever received from him, which is quite as interesting a sidelight upon his character as to his insistence about his mail.

She notes that when he was preparing his speeches or his editorials, he had the habit of walking about the room and delivering them with as great fervor as though he were addressing a public audience.

The Man With a Message. He never spoke without a message, says Miss Stricker. On one occasion in 1912, two newspapermen who were accompanying him on his tour at Salisbury, Md., strolled over to see that the press arrangements were complete for the meeting he was to address. "Fine," said one who had joined the party on the previous night. "The other smiled and then wrote: 'I will first say, "Take down those ropes so that everyone can get close to the platform," and then he'll add, "move those tables to one side so that everyone can hear me." He's not coming here to be a spectacle for the mob, but to deliver a message. It turned out exactly as the Colonel said. The Colonel using the very words the correspondent had employed. He undoubtedly believed that he had messages of enormous importance for the American people. This was not egotism, but simply a sane knowledge of the fact that he had the ear of the public as had no other American of his generation, and that he foresaw grave perils menacing his country which only a roused consciousness on the part of the people could avert.

His mental versatility was one of his most remarkable features. He was an omnivorous reader, and read almost every page at a glance. It is related that on one occasion an Australian public man called upon him with a long article upon agricultural topics that he desired to discuss. The President ran his eye over the twenty-odd typewritten pages. His visitor said that he would appreciate the favor of a note when the President had mastered the document. "I have read it," said Roosevelt, and proceeded at once to discuss the matter, even quoting many of the figures, which were embedded in the screed. The Australian later said that it was one of the most wonderful feats he had ever witnessed. Others have testified at having been bitterly disappointed when having been commissioned to prepare reports on one subject or another, the President would merely appear to skim over the pages. Never, however, did he fail in this swift glance to seize upon the essential points, the facts that were to be most useful.

Miss Stricker says that his diversity was such that he could actually entertain two divergent sentiments simultaneously. Once he received the following note from one of his Rough Riders: "Dear Colonel, I am in trouble. I am in jail for shooting a lady in the eye—but I did not mean to shoot the lady; I was shooting at my wife." For an instant the humor of the appeal struck the Colonel, but in the same instant, reports his secretary, there came a wave of pity for a man in such a moral and mental state as to obey such an exhortation. As regards the part he might have taken in the Presidential campaign of 1920 had he lived, he spoke in Miss Stricker's hearing to Governor Allen of Kansas, in February, 1918. He said that he would not lift a finger to get the nomination, but that if the party unanimously and spontaneously offered it to him, he could not refuse. "The dearest to me in the male line are on the other side of the water, fighting and being made ready to fight for their country. If they do not return, what would the Presidency mean to me? In case they do return, nothing would give me greater joy than to spend the remainder of my time with my family."

TO CLEAN CLOGGED FILES

Files which have become clogged with tin or lead may be cleared by dipping them for a while in concentrated nitric acid. To remove the filings from the file cuts a bath of blue vitriol may be used. After the files have been rinsed in water they should be dipped in water containing nitric acid, about half and half. Files closed with zinc may be cleaned by placing them in diluted sulphuric acid. Files that have become dirty with copper or brass are also treated with nitric acid, but the process must be repeated a number of times. The files should always be washed in water, after the treatment brushed off with a stiff brush and dried in sawdust, or by pouring alcohol over them and burning it off the file.—Illustrated World.

In Memoriam

MRS. I. S. WRIGHT

The death took place on October 9th, 1919 in the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal, of Isabelle Walker, beloved wife of Mr. Ingham S. Wright of Campbellton, P. E. I. Mrs. Wright had been in delicate health for the past year, and had gone to Montreal for treatment and hopes were entertained for her recovery, but in spite of all that the best medical attention and tender nursing could do, her gentle spirit took its flight to her God. The late Mrs. Wright was a highly respected lady, possessing a very charitable disposition and an affable and genial manner, qualities which won for her the friendship and esteem of all who knew her. Her charity and never ending kindness will leave a void which time alone will fill while her memory will be cherished the secret of life's happiness, unselfish service for the good of others. The deceased, was a daughter of Mr. John Walker of Freetown, where the funeral service was held Sunday Oct 12 conducted by the Rev. Mr McQuarrie of Bedouque and Rev. Mr. Rice of Summerside. Very tenderly the remains rest near and dear were laid to rest in Bedouque Cemetery, there in dreamless slumber to rest till the day break and the shadows flee away. There are left to mourn a sorrow stricken husband an aged father, four sisters and four brothers.

Easy to Make This Pine Cough Remedy

Thousands of families are cured by its prompt effect. Inevitable, and saves about 5¢.

You know that pine is used in nearly all prescriptions and remedies for coughs. The reason is that pine contains several peculiar elements that have a remarkable effect in soothing and healing the membranes of the throat and chest. Pine is famous for this purpose.

Pine syrup and sugar combinations are famous for this purpose. The "syrup" part is usually plain sugar syrup. To make the best pine cough remedy that money can buy, put 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) in a 16-oz. bottle, and fill up with home-made sugar syrup. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, you make 16 ounces—more than you can buy ready-made for $2.50. It is pure, good and very pleasant to take hold of a cough, or cold in a way that means business. The cough may be dry, hoarse and tight, or may be persistently loose from the formation of phlegm. The cause is the same—infamed membranes—and this Pinex and Syrup combination will stop it—usually in 24 hours or less. Splendid, too, for bronchial asthma, hoarseness, or any ordinary throat ailment.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and is famous the world over for its prompt effect upon coughs. Beware of substitutes. Ask your druggist for "2 1/2 ounces of Pinex" with directions, and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute relief, or money refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

British Premier's Optimism Wins Lower House

(WESTMINSTER, Eng. Nov. 4.—The Prime Minister today underlined and emphasized the Chancellor of the Exchequer's confidence expressed in the latter's speech of Wednesday, in a speech characterized by remarkable buoyancy and optimism. So thoroughly did he sweep the House with his vivacity and hope that subsequent would-be orators seemed unlikely to get a hearing so prolonged were the cries of "divide." The Premier did not even refer to the capital levy and war taxation proposals which form the substance of the Labor Party proposals in the amendment on which he was speaking, and he failed to meet many other important points and criticisms.

On the other hand the House appeared satisfied that the essential optimism of his survey, as of Austen Chamberlain's idea, was more in accordance with the real facts than the pessimism and alarm which have marked newspaper criticism. For the most part the speech was a characteristic specimen of the Premier's oratory and an easy ascendancy over the House, and, as one member remarked to a reporter, made the government safe till the end of the year at any rate.

Lack of Remedies Criticized

R. Clynes opened the debate with a criticism of Mr. Chamberlain's speech, for its lack of drastic remedies for the financial situation and for the optimism which, he said, would nullify his appeals for economy. Mr. Clynes' speech was warmly praised by Lord Robert Cecil and the Premier for its statesmanlike breadth of view. Although the Labor amendment demanded a capital levy and a war for tax, Mr. Clynes himself only asked for an inquiry into these remedies.

A feature of Mr. Clynes' speech was the condemnation of subsidies and of sales as a remedy for unemployment. The proper remedy, he said, was to provide work.

Lord Robert's speech held the House by its characteristic honesty and constructively critical temper, his main point being that economy must be based on a policy and that the wholehearted practical acceptance of the League of Nations must be the foundation of economic policy.

Prime Minister's Speech

The Prime Minister summarized the reductions in the army and navy, the winding up of the Russian expedition, the abolition of unemployment, and other similar points, in contending that the government had taken great and drastic steps, but he reiterated that the country had just emerged from the costliest war ever known and that every penny of their debt

Watchfulness Not Complacence

The Premier said that he did not advocate complacence but watchfulness. After re-emphasizing the need for production, he said they must not mistake for economy a refusal to spend money on objects essential to the national life, such as education. In a notable passage, the Premier spoke of the unreasoning nature of fear and said they must not in a panic shirk their responsibilities and say they would spend no more.

Let them with courage face their liabilities all round and discharge all their debts but, above all, their debt to the people who were prepared to sacrifice their lives on the battlefield for the country they all loved.

The speech was emphatically cheered and despite the subsequent criticism of it, as theoretical and insufficiently substantial, it certainly, with the Chancellor's Wednesday speech, apparently completely satisfied the revolting feeling, removing for the time being any danger to the government from this direction. As a result the subsequent speakers addressed almost empty benches.
