Rome Letter

(By Thomas B. Morgan, United Press Staff Correspondent)

ROME, Sept. 9.—(U.P.) — Still playing Chopin as when he was the world's greatest pianist, Vladimir de Pachman, 84, wants to have "another fling" in America, "where the girls are the prettiest in the world and where they were always good to me," he told the United Press in an exclusive interview.

"Why do they not take me to America, or to England again," he said, "I am well enough to go. I traveled six hours in an automobile the other day. I could stand the trip."

De Pachman lives with his impresario, Doctor Francesco Pallottelli, and he still spends hours playing Chopin. Despite his great age, his fingers are just as nimble as a young girl's.

Played Chopin

"I can play just as well today as ever," he said. He sat down and played a Chopin prelude and then just lulled into a Nocturne as if the piano were his toy.

"You see," he said, as he continued playing with exquisite artistry, "I never have been better than now for I love Chopin as no other man and interpret him as no other pianist ever has done."

The great pianist has grown a beard this past summer and it now has become his great pride. All through life, he had shaved regularly so that at 84 his beard has become a great novelty with which he toys with the same enthusiasm as a youth cultivating his first moustache.

Plans Tour

He recalls, very vividly, all of his triumphs throughout the world and is enthusiastically toying with the idea of another triumphal tour, though his health may not permit. His doctors have been keeping in constant touch with him now for over two years, but he is of such strong fiber that they expect him to live for a good many years.

He asked that if they do not take him to America, they ought at least to take him to England, but the care which must be taken with him is such that the trip would be problematical. He has not lost any of his traits as an artist and still talks to his audience, while playing his Chopin.
