TWO CRIMINAL TRIALS CONTRASTED.

The New York World contrasts the recent trial of Dr. Crippen with that of Harry Thaw as specimens of British and American judicial procedure in criminal cases.

The trial of Crippen for the murder of his wife in London lasted four days. This was unusually long for such a case in an English court.

"The trial of Harry Thaw," says The World, "began in New York January 11, 1907, and lasted for 112 days."

Hon. George E. Foster has since his health was restored announced his intention to resume something of his old-time activity and prominence in political affairs.

Whatever Mr. Foster's "coming back" may mean, he will still be in opposition to the Government of the day and its general policy.

Mr. Foster's faults are chiefly those of temperament, a certain incompatibility, or inability to get along with other men.

ly. In any case nothing will be done hastily. The negotiations will be formally opened and then adjourned until after the Canadian Parliament assembles, which will give the Government a chance to consult its supporters as to the general sentiment throughout the country on this question.

It is laid down in Magna Charta that justice shall not be delayed. In that regard the British courts, both civil and criminal, proceed with celerity, excluding that which is irrelevant and reaching by the most direct methods the heart of the controversy.

Mrs. R. Smith, of Winnipeg, Man., tells an interesting story of relief from almost intolerable sufferings:

"I can hardly tell you how great my sufferings have been. Chronic liver complaint accompanied by biliousness was a daily source of trial to me. Every day I experienced the sickening effects of these ailments. I longed for some medicine that should permanently drive them away."

"Hearing of Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills, I thought they were worthy of a trial. My surprise was indeed great. From the very first I experienced relief. Continuing with them I found my troubles were slowly but surely leaving me, and before long I once more knew what it was to be free from the harassing effects of the ailments that had long sickened and weakened me."
