A TRIBUTE TO JOHN A. McLELLAN

John A. McLellan, Indian River, lived a life that typified the true, christian gentleman. He possessed a keen sense of honor and was renowned for his original wit-nesses. His company was most agreeable, most entertaining, and not one dull moment was tolerated. He could converse on current events, and on practical subjects, and his conception, his judgment always demonstrated the possession of keen, common sense. He could, in early years, enjoy sport with the boys, but he ever maintained an even temperament. He served, for years, the priest at Mass, and to do so, he often denied himself the enjoyment of harmless diversion. The district school he supported, both in auxiliary advice and in substantial remuneration. He could join in debate on any popular subject and his breadth of vision was assuredly evident.

With impartial intelligence he could discuss political questions, and always maintained equanimity, and ever gave full rein to the arguments of his opponent.

The pursuit of agriculture was his vocation, being always versed in the modern intelligence in husbandry. Never did he suffer the intrusion of sport upon the fulfillment of duty, and the neat and up-to-date evidence of his homestead demonstrates the exercise of faculties pregnant with wise, judicious forethought. The good that he has done, and the commendable example that he has shown, will surely endure. Y.

Words of deep appreciation were accorded the Ladies' Societies for their continuous labor of love, including their successful efforts in connection with the local finances as well as the budget. It was noticed that the ladies of the church were planning a picnic on a large scale to be held at an early date, not yet settled. ### Scotch Women Budget Income EDINBURGH, July 14—Scottish visitors, in conference at Dunfermline, compared notes recently as to their methods of helping Scottish housewives to budget small incomes to the best advantage, with a special eye to producing nourishing, appetizing and economical meals for the family. In Edinburgh, small classes are arranged in poorer localities to which half a dozen or more mothers at a time can come and learn how to cook with simple materials. The delight of women, whose culinary ambitions have never soared above a "fry" or a pot of kail, to discover that scones can be made with the aid of a griddle, and savory stews over an open fire, is great, and by no means confined to themselves. Husbands share it.

"My husband would think it a queer like thing, me going to a cookery demonstration," was a Glasgow woman's comment when the idea was first mooted. Male encouragement, however, was found to be forthcoming, and the demonstrations were arranged, much on the same lines as the Edinburgh classes except that a gas cooker was used. This plan as found not to meet the needs of the women still living in the old houses, where an open range or at most a gas ring represented the height of the cooking facilities. Accordingly, it was decided to ask one mother to lend her kitchen for a demonstration class, and to invite eight or more of her neighbors to attend it. The mother is paid one shilling for the use of her kitchen, and the dishes, when cooked, are hers, after those attending the class have been allowed to taste.

A further step was taken in another Scottish town, where the teacher met the mother early in the morning and accompanied her to the market. There she assisted at the advantageous laying out of the money to be spent on the day's dinner, pointing out which pieces of meat provided the best bargain, which vegetables were in season and so forth. Then, in the home of the mother, the provisions were cooked in the company of the class, and what is more they formed the actual dinner eaten by the family on that particular day. Such practical, homely instruction, it is maintained, is of the greatest value to the housewives, who in this way learn to make the most of their own simple equipment, and also to introduce a little welcome variety into the menu. For next winter, Glasgow plans to issue sample dinner menus, for a man, his wife and three children, and not one to cost more than a shilling. To provide a single nourishing dish, it is pointed out, may be better policy than to try to give several inadequate ones. In this eminently practical fashion, Scottish housewives are being helped to tide their families over a lean period.

Fishermen's Meeting

A large and representative meeting of the lobster fishermen in that portion of the North Shore from St. Peter's to East Point, was held in Elmira Hall on the evening of July 10, 1933, for the purpose of obtaining a Fall season of one month from August 15 to September 15.

The meeting was called to order and Mr. F. D. Bennett was appointed Chairman of the evening, and Mr. T. A. Harris Secretary. In his opening remarks, Mr. Bennett referred to the 1917 Fall season, which was quite successful, the following Spring being up to the normal catch. Mr. Thomas Poole was the first speaker in the interest of the fishermen and in his remarks outlining the great loss of gear, amounting to about two-thirds of the valuation, and unless a late season was granted they would be unable to make the necessary repairs for the Spring season. Speeches were also made by Mr. D. F. MacEachern, Mr. N. S. MacPhee and others. Hon. H. D. MacLean pledged his support in securing the season in question. Mr. Angus D. McIsaac and Mr. J. B. Matthew, large packers, promised an support that could be given.

Hon. J. A. MacDonald was present and also supported the meeting very strongly. Mr. MacDonald advised appointing a delegation to wait on the Minister of Fisheries, and also read some correspondence from the Deputy Minister of Fisheries.

It was then moved by Mr. Joseph McInnis, seconded by Mr. William Ryan, that a vote be taken to decide if the majority of fishermen were in favor of a second season. The vote was taken and carried unanimously. It was urged very strongly by the meeting that a central meeting should be called at Charlottetown and the following delegates were appointed: Mr. Dennis Mossman, Mr. John D. Gillis, Mr. Joseph Ford, Mr. William A. Ryan, Mr. N. Joseph MacEachern. A vote of thanks was tendered the Women's Institute for the free use of their Hall. The meeting closed with the singing of the National Anthem.
