My Best Girl By KATHLEEN NORRIS

"Maggie—why do you act so funny about it, As far as my shaming you to-night goes, why, I didn't do anything that all the girls of his crowd aren't doing every day!" Liz pleaded eagerly. "And if he makes that an excuse for breaking his engagement—"

"I'll sue him," said Ma heavily. "Here in this kitchen he sat, last Sunday afternoon, and told me with his own mouth—"

"You don't have to sue him!" Liz said. "He's crazy about her. Isn't he, Maggie?"

"I wasn't listening, Ma. I'm sorry, Liz, but I'm going to bed."

"I'm going to sit up with Ma," said Liz. "Their topic was good for several more hours of exclamation, analysis, and debate."

Mrs. Johnson and her oldest daughter slept late the next morning. They reached the kitchen together at about ten o'clock, having had not more than five hours of rest, and began at once on the leisurely breakfast that Maggie, as usual, had left ready to heat. There were cups on the table, and coffee in the pot, and bread was sliced; there was a fat little bottle of cream, and Maggie had left half the mixture of an omelette waiting in a yellow bowl.

It was all there. Joseph Merrill's picture, on the front page, was embellished, in a roocco border, with a sketch representing two silhouetted youths fighting in a courtroom, with horrified women fleeing in every direction.

"I'll just about kill Maggie!" said Lizbeth, aghast. "Go on readin', Liz."

"..... young Merrill, who, as far as could be ascertained, has been masquerading, since his departure from college, as a day labourer, and who, according to reports, has acquired an enviable acquaintance with the city's underworld, was detained without bail and spent the night in the city jail. At an hour this morning, efforts to reach his father at the country place at Elmingdale were met with th' continued on page four column three."

"Lizbeth read rapidly. "And suddenly, in their midst, was Pop. He had come home for his early Saturday lunch; he was as shocked as themselves."

"Where's Maggie?" he asked apprehensively. "Did she see the paper?"

"She's at the store, of course," Ma answered disapprovingly. "The store was closed to-day. They're puttin' in the automat. She must—"

"Pa said vaguely—'she must of went out!'"

"Maggie wouldn't never do anything—des'prit—'" Lizbeth was beginning, when Maggie herself came in.

"She came in quietly, through the kitchen door, and stood looking at them as if she were surprised to find them all there together. Her plain little new suit was brushed and trim—the homespun upon which Maggie's heart had been set for weeks before she really dared to spend the necessary dollars on it. Her cheeks were red, but her beautiful eyes looked tired and were set in delicate shadows."

"Fevven's sakes, where've you been? You had Ma and me worried," Lizbeth said.

"Well," Maggie expanded quietly, "I went to see Mrs. Merrill."

"What? do that for?" demanded the mother.

"There was something I wanted to talk to her about, Ma," Maggie said wearily.

"What? The question was shot, like a bullet. "Joe," the girl said simply. And she sat down at the table and leaned her forehead wearily on her hand.

"You never had the gall to do that, Maggie Johnson," Lizbeth whispered, impressed.

"Oh, yes, I did. I told her where Joe was, and they sent over to the jail, and Joe came in while I was there. And him and his father and mother and he talked it all over."

"Maggie! It was the older sister. "Don't he like you any more?" "He says he loves me," she said, dully.

"Oh, Maggie—fevven's sakes! Joe Merrill!"

"And because he loves me," Maggie said deliberately, "he's going to sail this morning for Japan. He sees that he'd only hurt me and make it harder here."

people, dearie," her father, sorrowful and sympathetic, said timidly. "Maggie, they just got him to say he'd do that so's to break it off!" Lizbeth said indignantly.

Maggie looked at them all apathetically. "I know all that I know he loves me now, but that they're going to kill it, if they can. I know his ship pulls out in twenty minutes and that I'll never see him again," she said simply. "But—" she glanced from one to the other—"with things here like they are," she said, "and Ma like she is, and Pa like he is, and you like you are, Liz—what can I do? I've worked, I've tried to make myself look good, and I've gone to night school, and I've lived the ideal life—but it doesn't seem to work, for me. If Joe had been what I thought he was, we could have climbed up together. But he wasn't, and I guess his mother's delight—I guess the time is coming when he'll think of me as only a girl he knew whose mother wasn't very strong, and whose father was a postman, and whose sister ran with a bootlegger that got us all pretty nearly into jail!"

She did not cry, she spoke evenly and gently, almost without expression. But at the finish she reached up suddenly to the shelf above the sink, and snatched from its position the ideal leaflet, with its cryptic message: "The way to begin living the ideal life is—to begin."

Maggie looked at it a minute, and her face worked oddly. Then, quite quietly and composedly, she tore it into tiny scraps and flattered them into the wet sink. And after that she walked slowly from the room, and they heard her bedroom door close behind her.

Runs Upstairs at 92 Daughter's Pride in Active Father

"I feel in duty bound," writes Mrs. A. J. W., "to express my gratitude for the marvelous results my father has obtained from Kruschen Salts. They should really be called 'Miracles.' He is ninety-two years old, and is as fit as a fiddle. He can nip about and run up and down stairs. His friends marvel why it is he is always alert, and never feels slack. He always tells them of the reason, my regular daily dose of Kruschen Salts every morning." We always recommend Kruschen Salts to all our friends. To my idea no family should be without it." (Mrs.) A. J. W.

Most people grow old long before their time because they neglect one vital need of health—the need for internal cleanliness. Eventually they start the healthy Kruschen habit. Then they start getting rid every day of all waste matter from the system. New, healthy blood goes coursing through the veins. And almost immediately they feel their youth has returned; they feel young, energetic and happy. In a word, they've got that famous "Kruschen Feeling."

PEOPLE MORE CONTENTED IN EARLY TIMES

LONDON, Ont., May 31—(C. P.)—Fifty-six years of married life for Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ball of this city leave them happy in retrospect. "People were more contented then," said Mr. Ball.

With respect to other depression periods which Mr. and Mrs. Ball have experienced during their long life, the former said that, although the "hard times" were not as generally felt in 1884, he distinctly remembered the soup kitchens for the unemployed men, and it was a common sight to see from 40 to 50 men shouldering buck saws at the market, ready to accept employment. "In those days wages ranged from $1 to $1.75 a day, but then living was cheaper. Today mixers of mortar drive to their work in $1,000 cars instead of walking."

CHAMBERLAIN QUIET ON WAR DEBT ISSUE

Debt Problem Regarded As a Matter For Cabinet Executive Decision.

(Associated Press) LONDON, May 31.—Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, sidestepped repeated efforts in the House of Commons today to obtain a statement of the Government's policy on war debts.

The interrogation of the Chancellor and his meagre results were accepted as confirmation that the debt problem is a matter for Cabinet executive decision.

Mr. Chamberlain said he never had heard of a suggestion that the question be left to the free vote of the House of Commons, as reported by several British newspapers.

"I cannot say at present whether I shall be able to make any statement on the debt matter before the adjournment for Whitsuntide," he told the House. This adjournment will be taken Friday.

Replying to a query about what saving was possible as a result of the United States Government's decision to accept currency payments, the Chancellor pointed out that there had always been the option of paying in United States Government securities.

Parliamentary observers expressed the opinion that the British debt policy already had been definitely mapped out but announcement was being withheld pending possible new developments in Washington, such as a report today that the United States was willing to accept $10,000,000 payment on account June 15 as an expression of good faith. (In Washington the White House denied revived reports that the President was negotiating for partial payment of debts.)

N. B. Premier Follows Steps Of Noted Father

ST. JOHN, May 30.—Political history of New Brunswick, for more than half a century, records a most prominent place to the name of Tilley. The new Premier of New Brunswick, Hon. Leonard P. D. Tilley, is but following in the footsteps of his distinguished father, Sir Leonard Tilley, one of the Fathers of Confederation, and a political giant of those early days in the political annals of this province and this Dominion.

Premier Tilley is now in his 63rd year, having passed that milestone but six days ago. He is the only son of a Father of Confederation to assume the post as Prime Minister of one of the Canadian provinces, and indeed the only direct descendant of one of the Confederation founders now prominent in the political and public life of the Dominion. His father came into prominence back in those days when New Brunswick was in its swaddling clothes politically. He served this province and this country in several prominent posts, having been in turn a member of the Legislature, Provincial-Treasurer, Premier, Minister of Customs in the Federal administration of Sir John A. MacDonald, later Minister of Finance, and for two and one-half terms Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick. As one of New Brunswick's representatives to the several conferences that preceded the formation of the provinces of Canada into a federated Union, Sir Leonard Tilley thus wrote his name in letters large and indelible upon the political and economic history of the Dominion.

Now comes another Tilley to the foremost post within the gift of his fellow citizens. He assumes the Premiership at a time when problems of unusual magnitude face the government of which he is head, but the new Premier is a vigorous man, has an abundance of energy and undaunted courage. One of his great assets which has been of untold value to him in his political life, has been his happy faculty for incouring few, if any, political enemies. He has ever been a staunch Conservative, but in and out of the House, he numbers among his personal friends and acquaintances hundreds who do not see eye to eye with him politically, but respect and even admire his political courage and aggressiveness.

There are few more active men in the public life of New Brunswick than Premier Tilley. He has extensive business interests in Saint John, in addition to his legal practice and he has always been very prominently identified with any movement which had for its aim the betterment of his native city and province. He attended the inter-provincial conference at Ottawa in October of 1927 as one of New Brunswick's representatives and on the first of July in the same year he took part in the official program at the Federal capital to commemorate the Diamond Jubilee of Confederation. Hon. Mr. Tilley and Mr. Chapais of Quebec were the two sons of Fathers of Confederation who were honored with a place on the official programme at that time. The new Premier has represented the Government of New Brunswick on several occasions, and was the official delegate of this province on the Trade and Goodwill Mission to Cuba, Trinidad and South America in 1931. When Minister of Lands and Mines he represented the province at the Sportsmen's Show in Boston and in 1930 was New Brunswick's official representative at the Toronto Winter Fair.

Last year Premier Tilley was one of New Brunswick's delegates to the Imperial Economic Conference, being associated at the conference between representatives of Britain, the Dominion, the provinces and the Canadian Lumbermen's Association.

The new Premier has been President of the Saint John Law Society and for many years has been on the executive of the Canadian Bar Association. He attended the conference of the American, Canadian and English barristers in London and Paris in 1924.

Premier Tilley was married on September 23, 1903, to Laura Tremaine, daughter of Archdeacon and Mrs. Richardson, of London, Ont. One son, S. Leonard Tilley is now following a journalistic career in London, England, and two daughters, Mrs. Henry P. MacKeen, of Halifax, and Miss Margaret Tilley, at home, complete the family of the new Premier.

Premier Tilley's elevation to the Premiership adds a rather poignant touch to the political history of New Brunswick. He is one of three sons of former Governors now members of the Legislature, the others being F. M. Tweedie, Liberal member for Northumberland and Herbert M. Wood, Conservative member for Westmoreland, but the new Premier is the first son of a former Lieutenant Governor and Premier to have assumed the post of Premier in this, of any other Canadian province.

OLD MASTERS AND NOVELTIES CATALOGUED TOGETHER

LONDON, May 31—(C. P.)—The unconventional does not dismay one Piccadilly bookseller, and after what he has done who shall say the English are conservative? In his book catalogue, side by side with rare first editions, is an illustration of ladies' buttonhole, dainty little posters. "How did these feminine fripperies creep in? The buyer says he won't apologize, hanged if he will."

Recently he called at a house to look at some books, but, on a table something else caught his eye—artificial buttonhole-bouquets, made up by a clever amateur, a woman, from old watch springs, cats' eyes, dolls' eyes, buttons, fragments of old imitation jewelry. In some cases the leaves were of ordinary millinery work, in others were old fragments of mother o'pearl, moss, agates, tortoise shell, etc.

Thinking that they were both curious and beautiful and showed very remarkable ingenuity and taste, and finding they could be purchased he promptly took the lot, about fifty-five dozen, and proceeded to advertise them in his elaborate catalogue.

NEW BIVALVE MOUSETRAP USING AUTOMATIC BAIT CATCHES MICE IN PAIRS

TAOOMA, Wash., May 30—An oyster sprung the trap on two mice looking for a meal. Chris Rose, superintendent at an oyster company plant here, found the dead mice dangling from the clamped "lips" of a large Pacific oyster. The opened shell clamped down on the heads of the mice, apparently as they took their first nibble at the bivalve.

New Tax On Gold In Africa

CAPE TOWN, South Africa, May 30—(C. P. Cable)—Minister of Finance N. C. Havenga, delivering the Budget Address in the House of Assembly today, announced the Government would take an additional $6,000,000 from the country's gold mines in the form of a new tax, representing about one-third the additional profit resulting from South Africa's abandonment of the gold standard.

FEATURED CANADIAN STEW

NEW YORK, May 31—(C. P.)—A "Canadian stew" was recently featured in the cookery pages of a newspaper here and the same column has this note: "Mild flavoured lean Canadian bacon is a real breakfast treat. It is offered at Washington Market retail booths whole or half strip at 42 cents a pound. A tasty and economical luncheon or supper dish for the busy housekeeper is made up of veal patties wrapped with bacon. The patties weigh one half pound each, all ready to fry or broil as they came from the market."

"I told you I knew Barbara wasn't happy," Pauline informed him later on when she was lying cozily in bed. "I wouldn't tell anyone but you, Dennis, darling, but she does love someone—frightfully!" "Half a dozen of 'em, I should think!" "No—seriously, one!" Pauline insisted. "There was quite a different look about her when she told me." She lay still watching him with adoring eyes. Presently she said shyly, "Dennis?" "Um?" "You love me best in all the world, don't you?" "What would you do if I said the answer was in the negative?" he asked, teasingly. "Die," Pauline whispered. "Then you may safely live," he assured her. Pauline sighed and closed her eyes. It was no use; she realized that nothing on earth would ever make Dennis romantic.
