Mrs. B. Deacon, Mrs. Louis Campbell and Mrs. Gordon MacLean; correspondence read was a letter from Tuberculosis League, and Mrs. Deacon and Mrs. Gordon MacLean were appointed delegates to Charlottetown Oct. 12th.

Letters were read from supervisor re short courses, and questionnaires. These were distributed to the following convenors: agriculture, Mrs. Geo. MacLean; Canadian and national events, Mrs. G. Baidenston; peace education, Mrs. Johnson; child welfare, Mrs. Deacon; legislation, Mrs. Lane; public health, Mrs. Campbell.
 The questionnaire on home economics was discussed and a splendid paper on "The importance of milk in the daily diet" was prepared and read by Mrs. Wm. Coody. Mrs. Roland Easter kindly invited the members to her home for the October meeting when the question on public health, convenor Mrs. Campbell, will be discussed.
 Meeting closed with National Anthem. The members participated in a mission contest put on by Mrs. Mitchell, after which lunch was served by the committee, assisted by the hostess.

door. Philip straightened himself and ran his fingers over it as he had done before. There was neither knob nor catch on his side — nothing more than a keyhole through which he could not see. If only he had a pocket knife — anything at all — he might be able to make an assault on the door. Then he bethought himself of the small fireplace on the farther side of the room and groped his way unsteadily towards it. The hearth when he reached it was bare. Then his fingers touched the three horizontal bars in the old-fashioned gate. He tugged at each in turn. They seemed immovable. But the bottom one, he imagined, was not as secure as the two others. He tugged harder. Yes, it was certainly looser. Hope gave him renewed strength and after a minute of concerted struggle one end appeared looser than the other. Sweat was pouring down his face. The exertion atop of what he had gone through at the Chinaman's had sapped his strength. He rested for a few minutes, returning to the attack. The rest had done him good and ten minutes later he was sitting in the darkness with a short bar of iron across his knees.
 Calling to the door again he first tried to insert the wedge end of the bar into the keyhole. Only to find the aperture too small to accommodate it. Next he tried the space between the door jamb and the door itself, and in this he was more successful. Inserting it at a point where he judged the lock must be least all his strength against the lever. At first nothing happened. He swayed almost dizzily backwards and forwards, finding that as the lever operated he was able to push it a little further home. At last his dull ears detected a faint, almost imperceptible splintering noise, and he redoubled his efforts once more. Fortunately the woodwork on the slotted side of the jamb was being slowly undermined by dry rot. The splintering became more pronounced until, at last, a piece fell away to the floor enabling him to insert his bar still further and to such an extent that he could prise the catch from its socket.
 Philip almost fell backwards in a daze as the floor as the door swung inward.

The Suchow silk had been directed towards discovering the secret of the Eyes of Medichus. His regret that he had been unsuccessful was tempered somewhat by the knowledge that, so far, no one else had discovered it either. He had proved, too, that he himself, while the mainspring behind the Tong organization, had had no hand in the murder of Molesue. He had confessed that Wu Ti, one of his minions, had been guilty of that crime. As Sen Yat Soh expressed himself, Wu Ti was a blunderer. He admitted that Wu Ti was acting under his instructions, but Wu Ti would never be brought to the bar of English justice. During the raid on The Beeches the Chinese killer, realizing that the game was up, had obligingly jumped from the roof in his terror and they found his body in the gravel at the rear of the house. Ling Foo, too, was dead, but the Home Office had decided that his death had been what might be legally termed an accident and Philip Slater was likely to be exonerated at the coroner's inquiry at Tonbridge. The police certainly had no official evidence against him. But what the Home Office did propose to do was to arraign Sen Yat Soh before a magistrate on a charge of abduction and also with being an undesirable alien, so that after a high on a triple-tiered hillock which tradition says was built by slaves carrying earth in buckets, the mansion overlooks the placid Wye River on three sides. Colonial Mansion May Be Future Home Of Windsors

WYE ISLAND, Md., Oct. 7.—(AP)—For months fisherfolk heading into Chesapeake Bay have watched a mansion grow on Wye Island and declared—"It'll be fit for a king."

And now, leaning on the gunwales of their fishing boats, they're talking even more—the restored colonial mansion may be the home of the Duke and Duchess of Windsor, say wealthy folk of the district who entertained the Duke on his visit to the United States in 1924. Only finishing touches are necessary to put the beautiful brick home in living condition.

Government Will Hear Representations From Alberta

OTTAWA, Oct. 7.—(CP)—Alberta's Government will be given an opportunity to make representations to the Dominion Government before final decision is reached on the provincial statutes referred by Lieut. Governor J. C. Bowen to the Governor-General-in-Council.

Prime Minister MacKenzie King tonight said he had received a telegram from Hon. W. A. Fallow, minister of public works, railways and telephones, acting premier of Alberta, stating that his Government desired to make representations to Ottawa on the three measures sent here after the Provincial Lieutenant Governor had delayed giving assent.
 His reply, Mr. MacKenzie King said, was that the Government would be pleased to hear any representations when dealing with the acts in question.

Roosevelt To Confer With Cabinet Today

HYDE PARK, N. Y., Oct. 7.—(AP)—The delicate foreign situation revolving about the Sino-Japanese conflict, will be discussed tomorrow at President Roosevelt's cabinet meeting.
 Shortly before the president boarded a special train for an overnight ride to Washington, presidential aides here said he would hold his regular Friday session with United States Cabinet officers.
 Indications were plain that world affairs would be considered

Stresses Need For Life Of American More Ministers Aviator Spared

(By The Canadian Press)

NEW GLASGOW, N. S. Oct. 7.—Necessity of more ministers for the fields was stressed by Rev. Dr. MacCulloch Thompson of New Glasgow, N. S., in his Home Missions report tabled today at the meeting of the Maritime Synod of the Presbyterian Church.
 Services opened with a short service in Gaelic, conducted by Rev. Malcolm MacDonald of Bourladerie, N. S.

SALAMANCA, Spain, Oct. 7.—(AP)—Harold Dahl, American aviator shot down by the Spaniards Insurgents while he fought for the Spanish Government, was sentenced today to be shot for "rebellion" but was immediately reprieved.
 The flier will be held in jail here waiting further orders—probably for his exchange for a Government-held insurgent prisoner.
 Three Russians, tried with Dahl on similar charges, received the same treatment
