The HOUSEWIFE and HER ACTIVITIES

IN AN OLD-WORLD GARDEN
Tall daffies, awaying in the breeze
Beneath the gnarled old apple trees,
No pleasure bring;
The simple fragrant mignonette,
With countless brilliant diamonds set where dew-drops cling—
No longer do they please my gaze;
No blooms that catch the sun's
Bright rays relieve my care.
For one to cull them I await:
I wash beside the garden gate
For Celia fair.

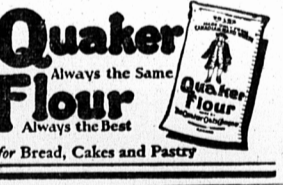

Blue pansies, with their elfin eyes
That match the white-flecked
turquoise skies wink up at me,
Sweet William shakes his gaudy
head,
All decked in pretty white-and-red
So daintily.
Their varied charms I do not see;
I look across the dappled leaf;
I yearn to greet:
Another blossom fairer still;
I see her tripping o'er the hill—
My Celia sweet.
And now I head the old gate creek;
I feel too full of joy to speak;
I kiss my dear,
And let those tiny flowers so fair
Been sweeter here than anywhere:
The truth is clear.
Pansies and daffies, with their rest,
Are nodding welcome to my guest.
As each one traces
To catch the glance of Celia fair.

WEDDING PRESENTS FOR THE JUNE BRIDE
June brides have already planned their trousseaux, ordered wedding dresses and are thinking about wedding presents, whether they'll admit it or not. Here are a few tips.

The silverware she receives is part of the foundation of practically every bride's setting-up housekeeping. With checks from the family, with gifts of silver, glassware and china from friends and relatives she begins her new life.

A BETTER ATMOSPHERE
A few drops of disinfectant added to the water when cleaning the bath room are well added. It will give the room a clean smell and at the same time will kill any germs that may be lurking in the bowls.

READING MATTER IN THE GUEST ROOM
Every guest room should be equipped with reading matter of varied sorts. A few current magazines, a good book or two, and a Bible. Many people who sleep poorly like to read a little while before turning out their light and a great many people sleep better after reading a chapter from the Bible. It is an easy comfort to add to the guest room.

RIGHT FROM THE START
So many new fathers seem to feel tiny babies are uninteresting and take the stand that they will have something to do with them when the babies begin to take an interest in them. These fathers miss a great deal of fun first of all and they are very apt to miss out on a great deal of love later on if they take a remote stand with their babies. Babies form habits, too, and they react immediately to those who love them and show them the most attention. Start right in with your responsibilities, Daddy, and you will find you will love it.

STYLE WHIMISIES
The popularity of dark linen shoes is rapidly increasing, for wear with dark clothes.

Tailored sheer blouses again are popular for wear with suits of taffeta, bengaline and acetates.

Necklines in daytime dresses are getting lower sleeves are short, and sometimes gathered horizontally; gloves are longer and many hats very small.

THE SHORT WOMAN
Although you can change your weight, proportions and manner of dressing, improve your complexion, hair and nails, you simply cannot—once you have stopped growing—make yourself taller or shorter or change the formation of your bones.

It is a waste of time to worry about your height. If you are short, stay slim and make up your mind to wear clothes that enhance your appearance. Don't try to shorten and wear dresses which were designed for tall women and don't wear three-inch heels when you ought to have on sports or walking shoes. You are supposed to dress in good taste, regardless of your size.

Cotton seersucker in multi-colored stripes is an equally popular scheme with bias bind trim.

Made in a jiffy is this one-piece model! A Detailed Step-by-step instruction chart is included in the pattern.

A Morning Smile

IN LIGHTER VEIN
Mrs. Finigan caught sight of her neighbor's new signboard, with the following inscription: "Washing and ironing done."

"Wud ye look at that!" she exclaimed indignantly. "Washing and ironing done indeed! Shure she ain't one better than O. am. O. I've had me washing and ironing done since yesterday, but you don't see me hanging out a signboard bragging about it!"

A Scottish cleric owned a farm, which was run as economically as possible. One day, taking a stroll, he saw his plowman sitting idle on the handle of the plow while the horses took a needed rest. He was paying the man sixpence an hour and so he gently, but reproachfully said:

"John, wouldn't it be a good plan for you to have a pair of shears and be trimming these bushes along the fence, while the horses are resting?"

John returned the minister's gaze, and answered: "And might I suggest that you take a bowl of potatoes into the pulpit and peel 'em during the anthem?"

THE COOK'S CORNER

ROLLED OATMEAL COOKIES.
Two eggs beaten, 3-4 cup brown sugar, 1-2 cup milk, 3 cups flour, 1 cup rolled oats, 3 teaspoons baking powder, 1 teaspoon salt.

SHORTBREAD.
Four cups flour, 2 scant cups butter, 1 cup brown sugar, 1-2 teaspoon baking powder.

Mix these ingredients well, and then add 1 beaten egg. Roll out and cut with small cookie cutter. Then with centered with a small ring of plain or colored icing and topped with a whole nut meat, are nice for special occasions.

This cookie can be made a little richer by using two tablespoons melted butter and 3 to 4 tablespoons milk in place of the 1-2 cup milk.

Every Girl Contemplating Marriage Should Consider the Business of Her Future Husband and Decide if She Can Properly Fit Into it

When girls contemplate matrimony they seldom give a thought to the occupation of the prospective bridegroom beyond hoping that it will bring in enough money to enable them to have fresh water waves, a little automobile and good hats. Yet, in reality, nothing is a more important factor in the success or failure of any marriage than the way in which the husband makes the dough.

Every wife finds to her surprise that she has committed bigamy and that she is just as much married to her husband's business or profession as she is to him. Hence it behooves every maiden to consider long and prayerfully how she is going to like a lifetime of being Mrs. Green Grocer or Mrs. Banker, for her happiness is going to depend on whether she is as enthusiastic and interested about about her husband's work as he is, or whether it gets upon her nerves.

The importance of this matter has recently been vividly called to our attention by the wife of a famous golf professional, who has divorced him because she said she couldn't stand being a golf widow any longer. Doubtless the eyes of thousands of other women have turned longingly towards Reno when they found themselves united to shops, or farms, or running a poor second in their husbands' affections for the stock market.

So when a girl picks out a husband she should pick out his occupation at the same time, and consider that with due regard to her own temperament. Tastes differ in life partners, as in all else. There are plenty of women who like to be married on the installment plan, so to speak, who would never hesitate to marry sailors, explorers, adventurers and men who follow roving pursuits.

No men are more run after by women than preachers. No woman can resist the man who talks to her about her soul. Besides, there is something romantic and appealing about a young clergyman that makes a girl feel that he needs some one to take care of him and help bear his burdens, and that she is the one to do it.

But before she takes him for better or worse, and the church along with him, she does well to have a heart-to-heart session with herself and decide if she has the tact of a diplomat, the patience of Job, the meekness of Patient Griselda and the skin of a rhinoceros; how she is going to like being bossed and criticised by all the old sisters and having the young sisters spend hours telling her husband about their doubts and fears and religious convictions, which always require the more discussion the handsomer the preacher is.

Next come doctors in the point of eligibility. Girls always regard them as a good matrimonial bet, and so they are as a class. But again, whether or not a doctor makes a desirable husband depends upon the wife's point of view. If she is philosophical and common-sensical, and realizes that the more feminine patients he has the bigger the bank roll, he is a good choice. But if she is jealous and goes green-eyed every time she thinks of his holding the hands of neurotic women in pink silk and lace negligees, she had better steer clear of the medical profession to which a woman can be proud to be connected by marriage. But lawyers have to have secrets and are not so forthcoming where they are bound to spend much time in study. A curious woman or a gossip should pass them by. So should a woman who wants her husband to step out with her every evening and who looks upon a book as a deadly rival.

That actors and crooners and singers are dangerous matrimonial risks, as a general thing, is amply proven by the number of divorces they get. Doubtless this is due to their professions. No normal woman can ever really believe that her husband is play-acting when he is pouring out words of devotion to a beautiful blonde and clutching her to his manly bosom. When it comes to witnessing him giving a long drawn-out forty-bosom footage kiss she just grabs her hat and goes back to Mother.

Taking it by and large, probably the safest occupation for a husband to have is just to be a plain business man. He deals with facts and figures, instead of romance and passion and emotion, and that keeps his feet on the ground. His chief concern does not bring him in ood much contact with women nor inspire his adulation and flattery. He is accustomed to a balancing profit against loss, and he is satisfied with a wife who strikes a good general average. Above all, when he makes a contract he sticks to it, and that makes him a good man to tie to.

"Well, why shouldn't she?" Bryn demanded. "She should have been told as far as that does. I thought you would tell her something to satisfy her. She's one of the gang isn't she, and after all, we did go around together pretty steadily. Tobby, if she's upset, I don't blame her much. It would have been only common courtesy on my part and write and tell her the whole story, but it was too damned awkward, I tried."

"And the reason it was awkward, Tobby said evenly, "was because she wasn't just one of the gang, and you know perfectly well that she expected to marry you in the end. Didn't you?"

"I didn't ask her to."
"Don't quibble."
"I never told her I was in love with her. I wasn't in love with her. I've never kissed Pilar in my life." He looked down at the note. "It's a very kind note, under the circumstances," he said. "she might perfectly well have written it to me. I don't see why she didn't."

"That note," Tobby said deliberately, "is about as innocent and kind as a stick of dynamite with a fuse burning."

"Oh, don't be a fool, Tobby. What's got into you anyway? You used to like her. You said she was a good sport, and a lot of other things. You and she were great pals."

"Mhm," Tobby agreed. "So we were. So we were. But why? That's what I found out when you pulled your little stunt. She didn't care two pins about me. The only reason she ever spread herself about me was because she thought it might make it easier for her to get you. See? And that night when I went to tell her that you were married, I caught her off her guard. Never again. I wouldn't go near her with a suit of boilerplate on."

Bryn folded the note and put it back on the table.
"And now," Tobby said, watching him, "she knows where you are."
"And what of it?"
"Nothing. Nothing at all. Go on mooning, old hophead."
Bryn took out his case and lit a cigarette.

"Say, Bryn," Tobby said at last, "did you hear what Madeline said to me tonight?"
"What did she say?"
"Well, nothing much," Tobby answered, embarrassed. "It was the way she said it. You know, Madeline's a darn nice girl. I never really thought much about it before, sort of took her for granted, you know. But she's a peach."
Bryn got up leisurely and went to the door. He opened it up. Bryn moved across the hall and tapped at Madeline's door. Tobby sat up, stiff with horror.

"Madeline," Bryn called through the keyhole.
"Mhm?"
"Madeline, Tobby says he likes you."
"Oh," Madeline said, and obviously sat up in bed. "How much?" she inquired after a moment.
Bryn turned. "How much, Tobby?"
"Bryn, if you aren't the damndest fool!"
"How much?" Bryn said inexorably.
Tobby's dimple waved in and out widely. "I said I thought she was a darn nice girl," he muttered.

CHAPTER IX
The breakfast table was spread on the small terrace at the side of the house, where Bryn and Deborah had eaten their first breakfast together. There were six places laid, but Sally was still upstairs, sleeping, as Simon explained, like a dormouse; and Bryn had not yet returned from his early errand to the farm down the road. Deborah, in freshly starched blue gingham, sat erect on her chair behind the silver coffee pot, and poured out a third cup for Tobby. Beside her, Madeline sat quite, gazing dreamily out through the trunks of the tall pines and looking, from time to time, at small crumbs of toast to a greedy chipmunk who sat up and begged for them with bright expectant eyes.

"Well," Simon sighed, "I wonder if today will be the big day."
"Oh, probably not," Tobby said comfortably. "I give" him until about Thursday noon.

"It doesn't make any difference when he comes, does it?" Madeline inquired. "The sooner he comes, the sooner it will be settled. I wish he'd come new and get it over with."

As she spoke, Bryn pushed open the dining room door and came out to the terrace. He put a hand on Simon's shoulder, tweaked Tobby's lower eye lashes, and spoke to Madeline. "Who me?"

"No, Graham."
"Hell, come," Bryn said cheerfully and pulled up his chair. "And there's one sure thing, he won't get past Joe I left Joe on a box high up on the seat of a wagon box, where he can see the road coming up the mountain for about two miles. He's got the wagon pulled under a shady tree, and he's got an old pair of spy-glasses, and the horn. When I left I heard him making arrangements with his mother to bring out his meals. I'd like to see as much as a caterpillar get past him. And I've locked the gates, so we're all set."

Deborah handed him his cup, and as she did so, she lifted her eyes and met his upon her. She felt herself flushing, and the cup trembled in her hand so that some of the coffee spilled over. But Bryn did not seem to mind. He took it and put it down, and his eyes were still upon hers. Deborah turned resolutely away.

Bryn finished his breakfast, and he and Tobby and Simon left the table. They were going, Tobby informed the two girls, to inspect the dungeons and see that the chains were in good order.

When they were gone, Madeline put out her hand and patted Deborah's lightly. "Deborah," she said after a moment, "would you do something for me?"

"Of course."
