Astrakhan May be next Axis objective

LONDON, Nov. 3.—(CP)—The fall of Rostov, big Black Sea shipping and manufacturing centre on the Don River, probably would be the signal for a new German drive on Astrakhan, informed sources said today.

This would involve an advance of 400 miles from the Don across the wide isthmus which separates the Black and Caspian seas and would take the Germans to their furthest-most first war outpost. Astrakhan is near the mouth of the Volga where it empties into the Caspian Sea.

Although the distance involved in such an advance is great, the Germans thereby would accomplish two objectives.

They would sever the bulk of the Russian armies and industries from their oil supplies in the Caucasus, and they would cut into separate fronts the forces defending the Caucasus and the rest of Russia.

They would also upperil the British-American supply line coming up through Iran to the Soviet front. Although the Soviet Union has made strenuous efforts in recent years to develop a "second Baku" in the Ural Mountains to the east of the Volga, it is understood that about 75 per cent of the Russian supply of oil comes from Baku and the other fields in the Caucasus.

With the Soviet information bureau reporting today that German pressure continues heavy to the east of Tangarog and about Makeeva, informed sources here said the menace of Rostov is most critical. Tangarog is 30 miles west of Rostov and Makeeva about 100 miles northwest.

If the city falls Russia's most direct connection with Iran would be cut. A rail line runs directly from Moscow through Rostov to Baku and other ports on the Caspian Sea in the southeastern Caucasus. From there it is a shipping distance of only 300 miles across the Caspian to Iranian ports fed by a rail line connecting with the Persian Gulf.

A German advance to the Volga probably would make it impossible for the Russians to use that broad stream as an alternative shipping route from the Caspian. However, there is a roundabout rail route from the lower Caspian coast, past Tashkent and the Turk-Sib railway east of the Aral Sea. The Turk-Sib connects with Kulyb-shev on the Volga where some Soviet government departments have established themselves.

Rostov also is the terminus of canals joining the Don and the Sea of Azov with the Caspian, and the city's fall would result in virtually excluding the Soviet from the Black Sea. The pipe line from the Baku oil fields also would be cut.

Russian forces left in the high mountain ranges of the Caucasus to defend the oil fields, however, presumably could still be supplied from Iran even if the Germans succeeded in driving to Astrakhan.

(It is on the Caucasian front that speculation most often has mentioned the possibility of British forces in the middle east joining hands in a common battleline with Russian troops.)

Informed quarters said there was no reason to doubt the German claims to capture of Kharkov, 240 miles northwest of Rostov, or that some German forces are only 35 miles from Moscow.

The Soviet information bureau said today, however, that the battle lines still are in the vicinity of Mochalsk, 57 miles west of Moscow, and Maloyaroslavets, 65 miles southwest.

Loss of Kharkov was said here to be a most serious blow to the Red armies for two reasons: It has been Russia's chief arsenal, and the Germans may be able to use it as a base for a broad encircling movement against the Industrial Donets Basin.

Calls for drastic Revision of Neutrality act

(By Richard L. Turner) (Associated Press Staff Writer) WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—(CP)—Calling for drastic revision of the Neutrality Act, Senator Josiah Bailey declared in the Senate today that the United States ships and their right to sail the high seas must be protected if it takes "shootings" to do it—"if it takes every battleship we have got to defend them."

Provisions of the Neutrality law which prohibit the arming of merchantmen and keep them out of combat areas and belligerent ports must be rescinded, he told the Senate, as a matter of "self-protection" of "self defence," and of "self-respect."

The North Carolina Democrat

THIS IS A CAT... Cats are a fact. You don't just im-ag-ine them... they EXIST!

"The cat ate the canary," said the detective when he found the bird was missing, and saw the feathers on the cat's nose.

"Down with cats," said the anti-felinists when they heard the news! That was THEIR opinion...

Here is a simple illustration of FACT and OPINION. It may help you tell them apart. Your newspapers give you both... MUST always give you both!

Because in our Canadian kind of a democracy, every man has a right to his own beliefs... a right to make them known... and a right to convince others if he can, by lawful and peaceful means!

We let any man propose his own brand of religion, his own brand of politics, his own views about laws or behaviour. We let competing merchants buy advertising space to state their offers, and give their opinions about the wares each believes you should buy from HIM.

Would you like to be ordered what to believe... told what to buy... sent to a new home you didn't choose? Of course not! Which is to say that freedom of choice is the key to all your other liberties. Which even in a primer book means that to keep freedom you must go on knowing what things there are to choose between... which are good and which are bad!

Opinions on whom to trust, how to vote... facts on where to shop, how to get a job... your newspaper is the sounding board for both sides of arguments, the mirror of all the facts. That is the essence of our kind of democracy.

Without that freedom, and without citizens CAPABLE of choosing for themselves because they read the opinions and know the facts, there is no democracy! There is only MOB rule!

And why do we remind you of these things now? For two reasons:

1. Because we find that some people think of "the freedom of the press" as a selfish privilege the NEWSPAPERS have... instead of a basic democratic right YOU have!

2. And because it seems that even now, in the midst of the war, too many people forget they have little hope of KEEPING that priceless right unless they actively prove they WANT it!

COMPLACENCY is our danger, all along the line. But especially here! For the publisher cannot guard this hard-won freedom by himself. Every editor, every pressman, every reporter, knows his responsibility. But it will take you to save it... by reading still more carefully yourself, by jarring loose your neighbour's complacency, by DOING SOMETHING when you see non-military news suppressed or "doctored." This fight to keep the freedom of the press is not just a fine theory... it's not to save someone else's skin... NO, it is your children's future liberty that is at stake!

THE PRICE OF FREEDOM IS ETERNAL VIGILANCE! This is one of a weekly series of institutional messages sponsored by an Informal Committee of Publishers under the chairmanship of Hon. W. A. Buchanan, and appearing in newspapers from coast to coast. Clubs, patriotic societies, business firms or individuals who would like reprints may have them by writing to the business office of this newspaper.

Keep the Diamond Dear Miss DIX—I have just received my engagement ring from my fiancé. It is a darling and just fits, but the diamond is quite small and Mother thinks that I should demand a ring with a larger stone. She says a wife has to take enough from her husband during marriage and she wants me to have a ring that I will be proud to show to my friends. Should I send the ring back and tell him that I would prefer to wait until he can give me a better one with a bigger diamond? A. L. O.

ANSWER—Well, if the boy has the spunk of a mouse, if you send the ring back to him demanding a better one, he will keep it and you will never get that or another one from him. He will know you for the grasping little gold-digger that you are and realize that you will make one of the kind of wives who work their husbands to death to give them the luxuries they crave.

Evidently your fiancé has given you the very best ring that he could afford. Probably he denied himself many good meals and comforts in order to buy the little diamond you despise so much and you show that you have little love for him and little appreciation of his gift. All you see in it is the price-tag. DOROTHY DIX.

Housing Laying Hens

(Experimental Farm News) There is truth in the statement that mortality in poultry is greater than it was in "the good old days." Part, at least, of this increase may be due to factors within the control of the flock owner, says B. F. Tinney, Dominion Experimental Station, Charlottetown, P.E.I. Having graduated from the day when birds were allowed to range (and roost) all over the farm, the present-day hen-house is too often badly overcrowded. Not less than four square feet of floor area per bird should be provided and this should be greater in the small house. While a twenty-by-twenty foot house will give satisfactory accommodation for one hundred birds, a ten-by-ten-foot house will handle twenty birds or less.

And again, sanitary conditions are not always of the highest order in the small laying house. Unlucky special care is exercised, clay or even wood floors are not satisfactory. Even with cement floors proper precautions must be taken to keep everything clean. Dirty floors, damp floors, the absence of suitable feeders, and water containers, and over-crowding, all contribute to lack of sanitation. With these conditions remedied, there is likely to be a decided improvement in the general health of the flock, with a consequent reduction in mortality.

In Memoriam

MR. J. WARREN NEWSOME

The people of Crapaud and vicinity were shocked, when on Oct. 25 the late J. Warren Newsome was called suddenly from their midst. During the day he moved about going through his daily routine; but in the late afternoon leaving the village with his daughter, he was suddenly taken ill in his own yard and passed away before medical help could arrive.

The late Mr. Newsome was exceptionally well known as he was a man who always took a keen interest in public and community affairs. He was president of the P.E.I. Mutual Fire Insurance Co.; a Mason of long standing; and one of the men who organized and promoted the well known Crapaud Creamery Company. He was a loyal member of the Christian Faith, being a member of the Tryon Baptist Church where he regularly worshipped and faithfully served his God.

He will be missed by the folk of Crapaud where he spent his life of eighty-five years; during which time he enjoyed the confidence and highest esteem of his fellow citizens.
