THE STORY OF A WOMAN'S TRANSFORMATION
By Marion Rubincam

ESTHER'S IDEAS

Chapter 47

"It's Providence, that's what it is," said Esther, shaking a pillow vigorously.
"What is Providence?" I asked, smoothing the sheet carefully and tucking in all the corners methodically as Esther liked.
"For reply she murmured some words which would be impossible to set down as she gave them. What she said was:
"It's Providence that Sarah's sister died, and she found that other fellow out West some place."
"For us she was holding a fat pillow tightly between her teeth and pulling on a pillow case, her words were very much garbled.
"I saw that Esther was about to express her opinion concerning Mark and myself, and there was nothing to do but let her have it. I pulled the white counterpane up neatly, and began folding the blanket carefully at the foot of the bed.
"It had been a hot and busy week. The farm work alone was more than enough for us. Jim had enough hired men now, but two of them lived with us, and that meant extra beds to make up two more rooms to be kept clean, and two more to cook for.
"Having accustomed myself to the small amounts of marketing necessary for Violet and myself during the winter, I used to stare

FARM FOR SALE

Here is the farm you are looking for. 72 acres of land, 45 of which are in smooth level fields, cutting a good amount of hay. It pastures 20 head of cattle, cuts 1000 cords of hard wood, lumber and a large amount of soft wood. An apple orchard and cherry trees.
A story and a half, nine room house in good condition, water at sink.
A sixty five foot barn, which ties 16 head of cattle, a hog house, hen house, granary and machine house. It is located on a good road, near neighbors, schools and churches. Sold on account of old age.
Price $3390 part cash, and the rest in easy payments.

Farms For Sale

I offer for sale my two farms at O'Leary Station, Farms adjoining each other. The homestead consists of seventy-two acres, of which sixty acres are under cultivation, the balance with wood and bushes. A brook runs across the entire farm.
The other farm consists of sixty-six acres, of which fifteen acres are under cultivation, the balance covered with second growth of wood. A brook runs across the farm. Both farms are near churches of all denominations, one mile and a quarter from school, a mile and a half from a roller mill and near the O'Leary creamery. A great opportunity for any one wishing to start a dairying business.

in amazement at the huge roasts that went into the oven for the mid-day dinner—and that were completely demolished before the meal was over. Jim was always what Esther called a "heartly feeder," and James came home home-ravenous. The hired men always ate enormously. We had meat three times a day—at least they did Violet and I—I suppose having trained our appetites differently during the winter—etc., as Esther said, "like sparrows." But I think we were the healthier for it.
We really worked so hard that there was little time for long conversation. Mark came once again that week, but I managed not to see him alone. Then he went back to his own home. This morning we heard he was coming back again in a few days, and that started Esther on the subject.
"Providence!" she reaffirmed, shaking the pillow hard and then setting it erect on the head of the bed. "I can see the hand of Providence as plain as you was fool enough to let him get away when you was young. I don't know whether you could have gotten him back last summer or not—I guess you could, he really did ask you to marry him, didn't he?" she gave me a shrewd glance out of her little greenish eyes.
"He wanted a housekeeper that's what it amounted to," I replied, gathering up the soiled sheets and going off to another bedroom.
Esther followed behind me pretending to do the room work—my special task, e stripped the dirty linen from the bed, and began putting on fresh linen, still fragrant from its long sunbath when it was bleached on the grass.
"Well he'll be more romantic this time," she predicted. "Even a man of forty has romance in him I s'pose—though Lord knows, Jim got over his romantic notions soon enough after we were married."
She shook out one pillow and held it between her teeth to put on a new case. I looked at her critically again—no wonder Jim had gotten over his romantic notions. There was a curious resemblance in shape between Esther and the fellow. She had allowed herself, even when she was quite young and only married a few years to grow fat and rather blowsy.
"She had fulfilled her mission in life—she had found a man married him, she was bearing him children and keeping his house. What else was there? Why should she keep his love. Hadn't she married him. Wasn't that enough? He had to go on loving her—he had promised to; it was in the wedding ceremony.
And beyond that she did not think. Later she regretted—but that was later. Meantime we shook out the pillows and turned the mattresses and discussed Mark.
"Course we all thought you were a hopeless old maid," she said with her usual frankness. "But now I got hopes of you, I dunno what you did to yourself. This winter—maybe you needed a change of air, or something. But you used to look older than me, and now you look younger. I don't think you even look as old as you are. Course you got gray hairs. I can see them, but your hair somehow has more color."
"And of course," she went on, "Laura and I both think your clothes airy and affected—but they do make you look younger, there's no denying that. And as I says to Laura, after all it don't matter what she does to herself now, she can wear dresses with skirts that hike in and show her ankles, and when she ought to be wearing common sense shoes at her age, and she can smear her face all up with creams and such truck—but it's all right, I says, as long as she gets him."
"Esther!" I cried in anger. "What are you talking about?"
"Mark of course," she said her eyes growing round in surprise

ple who live there. Some years ago he purchased a beautiful farm in the suburbs of Chicago and here he spent many happy hours. Brackental farm, as the place is known, is equipped with every mechanical device known to lessen the toil of the farmer, and with his thoroughbred stock, particularly his beautiful herd of thoroughbred Ayrshire cattle, is one of the show places of that delightful suburb. His love-able disposition were ever manifest, and none ever appealed to his cheerful generous nature were left unaided. He delighted to talk of the time when from business cares relieved he would return to the seashore and the scenes of his boyhood days. But his great energy and devotion to business sapped the strength of his body. About a year ago his health failed. Gradually he grew weaker until on September 5th he passed peacefully away. When full unconsciousness settled upon him and death was by his side the muttered word faintly spoken told the sympathetic listener that in his dying dreams he had relived the scenes of his early life. When so weak he could hardly speak one of his last acts was to call his stenographer to his bedside and dictate a letter to an old servant of his father's family, enclosing a check, a last farewell. MR. ARTHUR H. CAIE
It is with feelings of the deepest regret that we record the death of another successful Islander abroad. Mr. Arthur H. Caie, who died at Chicago, Ill., on Sept. 5 inst., in his fifty-ninth year. Mr. Caie was the son of the late Thos. J. Caie, Esq., a well known business man and about Tignish will recall the tall energetic form of Arthur H. Caie as he grew to manhood among them. Mr. Caie was born at Tignish on Dec. 14, 1863. He emigrated to the United States thirty-four years ago. With admirable courage and keen business sagacity he set out to make a fortune in the land of his adoption. At Cincinnati, Ohio, he joined his elder brother, Thos. J. Caie, who was the head of a publishing business which he had founded many years before. He subsequently became a partner of his brother and when Thos. J. Caie retired, Arthur H. Caie took over a very successful business with headquarters in Chicago, Ill., and with branches in all the great cities of the middle west. No part of his character was more marked than his love for the home of his boyhood and the peo-
