A Mystery Love Story

A VISIT TO THE HALL

We retraced our steps and entered by the little white gate. While Marget rang the bell, which creaked rustily, I took stock of the surroundings. At the far end of the garden, another white gate led into the lane, which was shut off with a line of thick bushes. A French window from the back of the jutting wing led on to a fairly well-kept lawn. It was here, I recollected, that the man Seymore lodged. The place, though gloomy, was not unattractive; and I could imagine Seymore's mute approval of its solitude, for it was indeed set in a secluded nook. I wondered which was his room, and would have asked Marget; but as the man's name had never been mentioned between us, I decided to keep my peace for a while on that subject.

To our summons on the bell, there was no reply. Not even a dog barking. "You see," said Marget, smiling "it's not once in a blue moon this bell is rung. Can the laird swallow his dignity and come around to the back after all, do you think?"

She skipped ahead of me and as we reached the back door in the yard a tiny gray-haired woman, with luminous eyes like a hare's emerged from a barn.

"Pardon, m'ls," she said. "I was at the chickens. Have ye been long?" "Only a moment," said Marget. "Jessie, this is Mr. Forsyth's sister. Mr. Drysdale, this is Mr. Forsyth's sister. You'll like Jessie."

The woman bobbed and bade me good afternoon.

"Is Mr. Forsyth about? No? Well, Mr. Drysdale wants to look over the Hall; can you find the keys?"

Do You Fear A Hearty Meal?

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Will Tone Up Your Stomach Making Mealtime a Pleasure

Are you afraid of meal-time? Does eating distress you? Would you rather go without food. That is the condition of many due entirely to indigestion. There can be no perfect digestion—hence no enjoyment of meal-time—unless you have rich, red blood. This pure blood is necessary to tone up your stomach and make it capable of properly digesting the food.

Many so-called stomach remedies merely try to digest your food for you. That is a mistake—nature should do that work and if nature does not do it serious results are bound to follow. Tone up your stomach by driving out the poisons that are in the blood. Make new rich blood and your appetite and digestion will soon be normal—meals will once more be a pleasure.

The one sure medicine to enrich the blood, restore strength and banish stomach trouble and indigestion is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Concerning them Mrs. Wm. T. Thompson, Brussels, Ont., says: "For years I suffered with indigestion, headaches and dizzy spells. I tried a great many so-called remedies without relief. As a farmer's wife, with three little girls, it was almost impossible to be idle and I just dragged myself through my work. I suffered so I was actually afraid of meal time. A friend advised the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and although I had lost faith in ever being well again I purchased a supply and began taking them. Gradually the dizziness and headaches left me. My appetite improved and soon I was able to enjoy my meals. I gained in weight and my health in general is better than it has been for years. I feel I owe much to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for they relieved me of all my misery."

You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

About two hours after eating many people suffer from sour stomachs. They call it indigestion. It means that the stomach nerves have been over-stimulated. There is excess acid. The way to correct it is with an alkali, which neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

The right way is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia—just a tasteless dose in water. It is pleasant, efficient and harmless. It has remained the stand-

"Aye, they're in his office," Jessie assured her, and clumped off in her heavy boots at a great speed, returning and handing a small bunch of keys to Marget.

"Mebby you could show the laird over the Hall miss?" said Jessie plaintively. "I'm no' decent to take the laird over." She spread out her apron and dolefully regarded her dress.

"This lane goes down to the main road at the side of the grounds," explained Marget. "If you mean to rough it there's a gardener's cottage near the back gates. I'll show you on our way in. It's unoccupied, of course but I believe there's some furniture in it, though not much."

"It'll suit us down to the ground," I assured her. "Lead me to the post, and I'll get my kit moved from the inn this very evening."

"You're a dasher," chuckled Marget candidly. "You're not going to let the grass grow under your feet. Well, here we are."

The hedge at the laneway gave place to a high wall, which was topped by heavy trees; and presently we came to wooden gates.

"Allow me," I stepped forward and took the keys; the gates swung back. It was indeed a scene of desolation that met my eyes behind these sheltering walls. Nettles overgrew the sides of the drive that curved among the trees to a jumble of low building which looked like stables. We pulled the gates close, and I followed Marget along a path to a long, long time (but for a long, long time he obviously not) housed a gardener.

"Just what I want," I said shortly when we had gone through it. "Three or four rooms and a kitchen. Is there any one in the village who could come in and slip up after us?"

"Jessie, from the Home Farm, you know, did all old Mr. Drysdale's cooking—everything. I'm certain she'll be glad to do everything for you, too."

"Splendid! It couldn't be better. I'll get my stuff moved in tonight."

"Well, I'm glad you're pleased with your billet," said Marget. She pulled the door shut and took me by another path to the stabling and out-houses all of which looked as if they had not been disturbed for years; panes of glass were missing, locks rusty, and grass sprouted between the cobblestones in the yard.

"Now the Hall," said my guide, and we made through a courtyard for the back door. Standing there while Marget selected a key, I smiled. I think of the last time I had entered that house, and the curious events that occurred, within. How much, I wondered did the girl know about it all? One glance into her eyes and the answer was clear. She knew nothing. And yet there was some connection between the Shaws and the man Seymore, a connection I could not understand, but which I felt certain time would reveal.

And whoever was in the right or in the wrong, this girl, I knew in my heart would come out of it all with clean hands.

We wandered from room to room. "No going back!" I exclaimed. "No question of that at all. I've said, 'I rest. I'm here for good.'"

I was quite unprepared, for the next thing that happened, and I could only stand back feeling like a stupid and awkward ass, for Marget suddenly turned from me, and was leaning against the shutter by the window, her face hidden in her hands great sobs shaking her slim body. I caught my breath. That she should cry like this! The thing was utterly causeless. I had said nothing to vex her. Could it be that—the idea jerked me up sharp—that she was crying because of me; because of my definite and final decision to live here; because of my safety?

With a bursting feeling of compassion and tenderness, I stepped to her side. I murmured stupid melting things which sounded absurd in my ears, and all the while my heart was drumming with love for her. Suddenly I put my arms round her, and drew her close to me, sobs tears and everything. Her slight body quivered, and her head was limp upon my shoulders.

her face still hidden in her hands. The sweet fresh fragrance of her hair was the most beautiful thing in the world. Softer I took her firm browned fingers from her face. The eyes, with the lashes thick with tears opened and looked up into mine, startled and timid, and she breathed one long shuddering breath. With a cry I drew her closer still and leaned to kiss her wet lips. When, with an exclamation she broke away from me and covered her face with her hands.

"Marget, my love!" I said. "You know I care for you—you knew from the first moment; I spoke to you!"

"Hush," she said, brushing the tears from her cheeks never say that again."

"Why do you hate me so much?"

"You know I don't," she said, almost bitterly, in a low voice. "But oh, I do want you to be just good pals."

"But tell me, Marget," I insisted, coming near her again, "do you care for me at all?"

"No, no," she cried. "I can't—I mustn't ask me that! Promise never—can't you understand?" She clasped her hands and her eyes were full of troubled shadows.

"You mean—there's some one else you care for?"

She shook her head vaguely. "You mustn't ask me that! Promise never to speak of it again. It is useless, it is useless, it is impossible." She held out her hand to me. "Shake on it, Ronny," she said, recovering her composure and smiling a little. "Shake! We're pals."

We shook hands solemnly then both at the same instant burst out laughing. It was but the reaction after those moments of acute tension, and I think that laugh seared my lips. That handshake and that laugh set up a barrier between us. Marget had some other loyalties into which I must not pry—at least I was barred from asking her to disclose them—and how much or how little they had to do with my own position and the queer current of events that had swept me along I could not discern.
