In Memoriam

MRS ANNIE DIAMOND

There passed peacefully away at her home in Brookfield on Nov. 2nd, Mrs. Annie Diamond, widow of the late John Diamond in her 68th year. The deceased was born at the Appin Road daughter of the late Thomas and Margaret (MacLeod) Locke, and when a young woman came to make her home in this community.

Possessed of a cheerful and uncomplaining disposition she won the esteem of all those with whom she came in contact. Her home was always open to strangers and friends alike who received her kind hospitality.

During an illness of some months, which she bore with a true Christian spirit, she was tenderly cared for by her daughter Margaret.

The funeral which was held from her late residence on Nov. 4th was largely attended, the service being conducted by the Rev. Dr. A. O. Thompson, who brought a comforting message to the bereaved. Hymns sung were Asleep in Jesus, The Lord Is My Shepherd, Nearer My God to Thee, while Mrs Thompson sang very sweetly The Old Rugged Cross. The pallbearers were: Messrs. Murdock MacSween, Millar Henderson, Ambrose Sentner, Charles MacDuff, Brent Dollar and John MacLeod. Interment was made in Brookfield cemetery.

There are left to mourn the loss of a loving mother two sons Charles and Russel and one daughter Margaret all at home.

She is also survived by three brothers, Richard, Brookfield; Samuel, Appin Road; and John, Vancouver, B. C. 12-12-11

DIES OF EXPOSURE.

PICTOU, Dec. 8—As a result of chill and exposure John Robertson, a youth of 14, belonging to Springhill, died in Sutherland Memorial Hospital, Pictou, on Saturday evening, Dec. 5. The boy's father had apparently been employed that day at Wood Island, P. E. I., but he had directed his son to stay at his boarding house in Pictou.

The latter had apparently gone on board a small gasoline boat which his father owned and which was tied up at one of the wharves here. When found later in the day, he was almost overcome with cold, and later died in the hospital. There is a possibility that he may have become ill on the boat and was unable to leave it. His mother and the other members of the family live in Springhill.

The bride to be was led to a prettily decorated chair by Mrs. Joseph Wise and an appropriate address was read by Miss Annie MacEachern. The guest of honor was presented with a well-filled purse by Mrs. Wise on behalf of her friends assembled. Violet in her gracious manner expressed her thanks and invited all to visit her in her new home, after which refreshments were served by Mrs. Will Alley, Mrs. Dannie MacKinnon, Mrs. Joseph Wise and Mrs. Alf Frizzell. The remainder of the evening was spent in cards after which all wended ther way homeward wishing Violet a successful journey through life.

IN MEMORIAM

MR. HARTLE BOWNESS

Again we are reminded of the uncertainty and brevity of life in the sudden passing away of Mr. Hartle Opie Bowness, son of Mr. Herbert B. Bowness and the late Mrs. Bowness of Kensington, at the early age of forty-eight years.

The deceased who had not been ill, was enroute to Malpeque to bring home a tractor, while walking along on the high way he suddenly collapsed and died without uttering a word.

The late Mr. Bowness was a well known contractor having worked in the United States for a number of years, on his return to Canada, he continued in this line of work in his home town of Kensington, later moving to Charlottetown, where he was known as a clever and noble man. He resided here for nine years recently returning to Kensington, where he had purchased a farm. He was a man of sterling character and a true Christian.

The funeral services were held from his late residence on Tuesday afternoon, Decist., thence to the United Church. The Rev. A. D. Sterling conducted the services, speaking very highly of the deceased.

The following hymns weer sung: The Lord is my Shepherd, Peace Perfect Peace and Shall we gather at the River.

Mr. George Bowness sang with much feelingg, "The Beautiful City Of God."

Notwithstanding the condition of the roads a large concourse of people gathered to pay their last respects to one who was held in their highest esteem by his many friends.

The pall bearers were the Messrs. Waldo Davison, Horace Glover, Aubren Lecky, Kier Clark, Leslie Mann and Leslie Simmons.

He leaves to mourn besides his wife, the former Miss Alene McLean three daughters, Alene, Mrs. Harry Mutch, Jean, and Eloise at home, two sons, Wayne and Stirling, three brothers and three sisters.

"The first break in the home is indeed hard to bear, but then,
But then some day, it may be in the coming years
We'll read the meaning of our tears
Ad then, oh then we'll understand."

Card of Thanks

Mrs. Hartle Bowness and Family wish to thank their friends and neighbors for many acts of kindness, floral offerings and messages of sympathy during their recent bereavement. 12-12-1i

Mother, Mix Your Own Cough Syrup. It's Fine

Gives Quick Relief. Saves Money. Easily Mixed.

This well-known medicine, mixed in your own kitchen, costs very little, but it gives delightful, swift-acting relief from coughs due to colds. It takes but a moment to prepare—it's so easy anyone can do it. And it saves real money.

Make a syrup by stirring 2 cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water a few moments, until dissolved. No cooking is needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.

Then get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist. Pour this into a 16 oz. bottle and add your syrup. Thus you make 16 ounces of really splendid cough syrup—and it gives you four times as much cough medicine for your money. It never spoils, lasts a family a long time, and children love its taste.

And for quick, satisfying relief, you'll say it's really splendid. It has a three-fold action. It loosens the phlegm, soothes the irritated membranes, and helps clear air passages. You'll be delighted by its prompt, pleasing results.

Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, a well-known and reliable soothing agent for winter coughs. Money refunded if it doesn't please you in every way.

CHAPTER XIII

Meridel went to Rudi and put her hands on his bent shoulders and kissed him tenderly. "You are splendid you know. Just as you are Baron Rudi you are splendid and I am proud of you and proud to be your niece."

"But I —I am nothing, Meridel."

Her laugh was suddenly like silver. "You are myself, I can see it now."

"I do not understand.."

She looked at him fondly as one would look at a very little boy. "I know you do not understand. Well, we must prepare to go to the city."

"Yes yes, at once. I shall go to madame and explain. I told her how it would be once you learned the truth. She will understand. She is a very, very kind and understanding lady, Meridel."

"Kind yes. But not understanding Rudi. Had she been she would not have done this thing."

"Well she thought it was no harm. She believed it would be best, where you children had seen so much trouble not to load any more disappointments on you the moment you arrived."

"I can see that she meant to be kind; you can appreciate that we could not receive her generosity and should never have been tricked into accepting it." The blue eyes were imperious.

"Yes I can see that. It was wrong, Meridel. Very wrong. I shall try to atone for it —for everything."

"There is nothing for which to atone. Go now please and make ready. We shall carry with us only the things we brought. We shall thank Madame Fabre-Lusignan. Yes, I have heard of Mimi Fabre as a great actress. I have proof of it now."

"Thank you child." Madame spoke from the dimness of the landing. "I could not help hearing you, though I would make no apologies for listening. And it is well I did hear; I think I can understand now why you feel as you do about —about the little game of make-believe we played. Believe me it was never staged from any motive other than kindness and the desire of spare your further pain."

"You are, as always, kind, madame." Meridel smiled up at her and curtsied. "And it was a lovely play, for which I thank you on behalf of the little ones and myself. But now the play is ended, you see. And this time the princess really does become Cinderella."

"There is no changing your mind." It was not a question. "Even if I ask you all to be my guests here; even if I tell you I need you to help me with all these children."

Meridel shook her head. "You can get dozens of your own countrywomen far more qualified and more capable than I to help you look after the little ones. We—Uncle Rudi and I—shall have our own to look after."

"At least let me have Gabriel Follet look for a place—"

Meridel held up her hand. "No more, thank you. All these kindnesses I have taken so much for granted —how can I ever repay you for them? So long as I thought we had a right to them I did not mind, but I could not have us impose on you for another day, another hour. I hope you know madame, that it is not pride so much as —"

"As noblesse oblige," said madame, coming slowly down the rest of the steps. "Yes I think I understand."

"We—we have to do for ourselves." There was a hint of desperation in her voice. "If we, who are taught that we are of the blood royal that we have certain high ideals to live up to —if we do not try to live up to them, if we take and do not give —ah, there has been too much of that. Those who rule should give more than they take. Is it not true that to be a king or queen should be the hardest job in all the world?"

"It is true Princess."

"Then—"

"There child think no more about it. May I present my guests to you? Martha Stahl and Guy Winterside. They were in my company for many years. I have told them about you. I have told them you are Rudolph's niece. They are charmed. They are a simple, kindly couple. They'd love to talk to you. Please come and have tea with us. The baron shall come too."

"We shall be delighted madame."

So there, in madame's room where the picture of Michel Fabre still glassless smiled on them, they sat for a pleasant hour and drank tea. The good-natured Wintersides knew nothing of the damage they had done. To them it was not at all startling that the lovely blond girl should be a princess; and for Rudolph to be a baron was quite in order.

"D'you know, Rudolph —Baron," said Guy, "I often said to Martha that you had the noble manner. Did I not, Martha?"

"But indeed! We used to say of the baron, Princess, that he buttled so well because he must at one time have been used to being buttled. Nothing in the world surprises one today. I heard of two truck drivers who had a collision and after they'd slanged each other a bit one said, "My good man d'you know I'm the Duke of Soandso," and the other said, "Oh, yeah, and I'm the Prince of Suchandsuch." And the point is, my dears that they really were!"

The Wintersides left after a few hours. In the black November evening the four exiles, looking strangely lost and pathetic in their worn and travel-scarred clothes, stood on the windswept platform of the little station of St. Didier. There was no one about. Old Fortier the agent, had sold them their tickets, locked up the place and gone off to his supper, grumbling about the cold. There was no need of his staying. The little mixed train would stop anyway to pick up the milk cans that stood like tin soldiers along the boards.

Meridel wore the old Burberry, the battered felt hat, the blue woolen scarf and study shoes, Pol Martin and Rosine and kept their warm winter coats. They were a present from madame. "And here," the old lady had said to Meridel, "is a present for you, Princess —one I hope you will not refuse."

It was the picture of Michel. Meridel knew it in a moment. Tears came to her eyes. She kissed madame and clung to her. "I thank you for it," she whispered. "I—I was going to ask you for one."

Madame did not tell her it was the only one to be had an enlargement of a sanpshot Mike had ever been camera shy.

"And you will come back soon" said madame. "This is only a brief parting. It is sad for me. I have come to love you all so much and Rudolph has been a part of the life here for so many years. It will not be the same when he is gone."

Rudolph was thinking of those words now as he burrowed into the fur collar of his coat. He could see the clock through the dusty window of the station. Going on eight. In the old days he would have been sitting sociably in the kitchen with the others of the staff, presiding over the evening's entertainment. It had been a good life a pleasant life. He shivered. The trees around the depot were bare; their branches rattled dryly in the wind and dust blew up the sere leaves and there was the smell and taste of cinders.

Meridel's woolen-gloved hand sought his arm. "I am sorry, Uncle Rudi I have spoiled things for you. It is not right. You should not have come. Soon you will go back there where you are needed where you can be happy."

He covered her hand with his. "Do you know, Meridel, I am happier tonight than I have been for years? You are my own dear nieces and nephew. It is the first time in my life that I have taken responsibility for anyone but myself. The first time I have had anyone to care about what I do. I never dreamed it would be such a pleasant feeling —to know that you are wanted that it matters to someone whether you live or die. We are together, you and Rosine and Pol Martin and I. We shall make a little corner of our country. We shall talk of home and sing the songs of our land and we shall find happiness. I know it."

MAYNE - CUMMINGS WEDDING

On October 21st., a very quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized by Rev. G. Carlisle Webster at the home of the bride, when Margaret Winnifred, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Alan Cummings, Breadalbane, became the bride of George Herman, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Mayne, Emerald. The bride looked lovely in a floor length gown of white printed satin, cut on princess lines, with sweetheart neck lines, her veil was three quarter length and she carried a boquet of sweetheart roses. The bride entered the room on the arm of her uncle Kenneth MacInn's to the strains of the wedding march played by her sister, Mabel. The groom waited beneath a dainty arch surrounded by potted plants. The bride was attended by her sister Georgina who chose a floor length gown of pink sheer with lace. The groom was ably supported by his brother Wendell. After receiving congratulations of those present they retired to the dining-room where a delicious dinner was served to the immediate relatives and friends. Misses Doris Woodside, Margaret Matheson, Isabel MacKay, and Marjorie Matheson, girl friends of the bride, assisted in serving. Later, a large crowd of serenaders arrived. After bouncing the groom and wishing the happy couple many years of happ wedded bliss, they departed to their homes.

Mr. and Mrs. Mayne left for their new home in Emerald. For travelling the bride changed to an English tweed suit with black accessories. Previous to her marriage, the bride was tendered a miscellaneous shower, when she received many lovely and useful gifts which spoke of the high esteem in which she was held.
