A Sweetheart at Thirty

THE STORY OF A WOMAN'S TRANSFORMATION

By Marion Rubincam

THE SENSATION

Chapter 45

The difference between Violet and myself as we left Henly Falls and as we returned, was borne in upon us more and more as we reached home. Driving through the short street that formed the heart of the village and at the end of which our home stood, we created little short of a real sensation.

It was early Sunday afternoon and everybody was out front—we could not have chosen a more public time to arrive, had we wanted to make our return dramatic. It was just at the time that the Sunday dinner had been cleared away when the men were resting or perhaps reading in the shade of the porches, and when the women having cleared away the dishes as quickly as might be, were coming out either to sit and rest, or to enjoy the first relaxation of the week—or to visit about social until time for the light supper and church.

"That's the third person that's said 'Hello, James,' Vi remarked as we drove along under the trees. 'Doesn't Jim Henderson know me any more? Aunt Enid there's the Diggs family on the porch—they don't know us either at least—they're not sure. Hello there,' she leaned out to wave a greeting. 'Well my land—' were the words we caught faintly from the porch, and Mrs. Digs came down the steps to follow us better with her eyes as we drove along.

Violet leaned back to giggle maliciously. 'Wait a little, we'll startle them,' she said turning to me. She gave her hat an expert little push which tilted it to a yet more becoming angle. Then she reached down into the very stunning handbag Helen had given her, found a little vanity case and deliberately powdered her nose with a miniature powder puff, so everyone around could see.

James looked at her with his slow grin. I felt that suddenly life was becoming more interesting to the boy. A great affection, and a great sympathy always existed between Vi and her brother, and now she was adding to this a little of the sophistication and a little of the newness of a strange girl from the city.

But the climax of the whole afternoon was Esther. She came to the door as she heard the carriage wheels grate on the stones of the roadway, wiping her hands on a towel. She was getting dinner—we were to have it later than usual, because of our arrival. So Esther had covered her Sunday dress with her weekday apron, and her face as usual was red and moist from cooking.

"My land!" she exclaimed. And again and again "My land!"

Violet ran up to her and kissed her then turned to watch her face as she greeted me.

"My land!" Esther said for the fifth time. "Enid Haines! I wouldn't have known you. What have you been doing to yourself?"

But I turned from her more or less cordial greeting to see Violet hugging her father and laughing up at him from the pleasure of seeing him again. Jim kissed me too something he had not done for years, and then we both turned to the rather perfumery embrace that Laura gave us.

"Well I wouldn't know you," Jim said frankly, looking at me as we stood on the porch after dinner. "I swear you looked like a little old lady when you went away. And now—gosh, you don't look 30—not more'n 30 anyway. You look like the little sister I used to be so fond of."

"That is charming of you Jim I said."

Until time for Sunday "tea" as we called the meal, we ate for an hour and odds-and-ends that we ate for Sunday supper, friends and neighbors kept arriving and we held a real reception. I was rather amused by it, and very much pleased. Their faces and comments were a reward for all my work and study of the winter. Again and again I heard that remark "I wouldn't have known you."

Of course, our clothes helped a great deal. We had worn very nice things that we did not want to pack, and—perhaps too, we had worn our prettiest because we knew the sensation we would create.

In every woman there exists a great actress. Unconsciously we all know when the dramatic situation occurs and how to play up to it; indeed, we all know unconsciously how to bring about the dramatic climax. Even I knew that though all country had been killed in me long ago.

We were a sensation indeed. They told us about it; they told each other about it. Of course, Henly Falls was such a quiet out-of-the-way little village that almost anything new was apt to be astonishing.

As I look back now, I marvel that in this busy age, such a town can exist. Yet it was logical enough—the country around us for miles was splendid farm land; the railroad was quite far away; our little river was not strong enough to furnish motive power for any factory; our falls, from which the village took its name, were very charming but had no value but that of beauty.

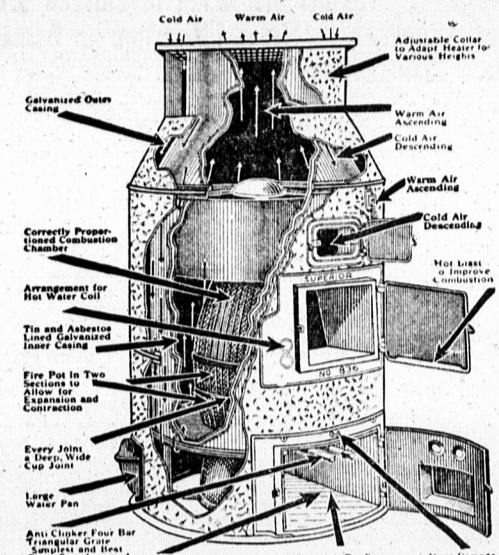

So we lived a placid out of the world life. And Vi and I came as new strange people—with our city clothes and city manners—all the more curious because they had known us before as even plainer and quieter than they. Laura said the first ungracious thing that day "Of course if you dress anyone up in such looking clothes, they'd look young. The idea of Aunt Enid acting like a girl! And wearing such a hat!"

A little chilled feeling went over me.

YOU SHOULD INSTALL A Pilot Superior Pipeless Furnace

IN YOUR HOME Because it will mean to you all the Difference between Saving and Spending

Our "Pilot Superior" Furnace should be in Your Home Because:

- 1st. It is adapted to meet the requirements of the average home.
- 2nd. The principle of it is not new, but as old as time itself, based on the fact that warm air rises and cold air falls.
- 3rd. Every room heated equally with moist warm air which circulates to every corner of the house.
- 4th. This type is safe, no heated part can come in contact with the inflammable materials of the building.
- 5th. The "PILOT SUPERIOR" Radiator has a cast top and bottom, the sides being of polished steel. This feature is far superior to an all cast radiator as it will not warp or crack, and radiates the same degree of heat as the fire box. This make of radiator has supplanted the all cast kind.

We have a Carload of these Furnaces on hand. Five sizes to choose from. Order today and get the advantage of the special carload lot price.

REASONABLY LONG SKIRTS FOR SCHOOL

LAWRENCE, Mass., Sept 26—The girls of St. Mary's High School, 190 in number voted today that the skirts of their new uniforms shall be "reasonably long."

Ten inches from the ground is the regulation length, Rev. Fr. James T. O'Reilly, pastor of the church and head of the school, said, discussing the matter. The priest expressed the hope that other school girls would follow the lead of the girls in his school.

The ease with which corns and warts can be removed by Holway's Corn Remover is its strongest recommendation. It seldom fails.

The new Fall Fashions are most picturesquely presented in our comprehensive display which is the largest in our history—and many tell us the finest to be seen. Luxuriant Furs, dainty dresses, gorgeous coats and exquisite millinery are here in charming variety. Individuality is expressed in all the newest creations and to make the array even more alluring everything is marked at very special prices for Exhibition Week.

To further increase the pleasure of our customers we will have an expert demonstrator in the store who will enlighten the public upon the appropriate and also take special orders for anything outside our stock the fastidious might demand. This is an added service which we give for Exhibition week.

Individuality in DRESSES

In dresses is where we excel, a dominant note of individuality is expressed in the new Fall models.

IN CANTON CREPES we have an exclusive display—only one of each kind—Some are liberally embroidered in contrasting harmonizing shades; while others are beaded and further beautified by fancy ornaments and buckles. The straight-line effect is here favored by Dame Fashion.

IN TRICOTINE we have a gorgeous array. Some are plain and others are beaded or embroidered.

IN SERGES the popular colors are brown, navy, and black. The straight-line effect is here again favored, while some models are high-waisted with girldle. They are made up plain and beaded.

HOMESPUN, a product of Canada, is fast forging to the front, as Elite style in dresses. This material is made up in dresses, strictly tailored, with white collar and cuffs. The materials are plain and mixed colors.

Correct Millinery

for all occasions, is featured in our Fall millinery display. The extremely large, the very small, or the medium are all here. You can select style here confident that a proper head-size and superior materials are given. Our buyers have recently returned from the style centres and will advise you "the vogue" abroad.

New Cloth Coats

This department is distinctive for its many new creations. The very special prices for Exhibition week are particularly appealing.
