LETTER OF SYMPATHY

Mrs. John A. Johnston, Mayfield.

Dear Friend:—The members of the W. M. S. of Mayfield wish to express to you their deepest sympathy, in the severe trial you have been called to pass through in the death of your beloved husband.

We feel that words of ours can be of little comfort at this time. God's will be done. We know He taketh in His own good time, yet we also know that there is no sorrow or care, gloom or darkness, in that Heavenly Home to which our loved ones are removed. We wish also to extend our sincere sympathy to your mother and children, and trust God's grace will be sufficient for you in your sorrow.

Blessed hope that in Jesus is given
In our sorrow to cheer and sustain
That soon in the mansion of Heaven,
We shall meet our loved ones again.

Blessed hope in the word God has spoken
All our peace by that word obtains
And as sure as God's word was ne'er broken,
We shall meet with our loved ones again.

Signed on behalf of the W. M. S.
MRS. WARFIELD ORR
Secretary.

Sabatini's greatest story of love and adventure

The SEA HAWK

by RAFAEL SABATINI

Rosamund's weary eyes quickened to horror as she watched her—a horror prompted as much by the fate awaiting that poor child as by the undignified fury of the futile battle she waged against it. But it happened that her behavior impressed a Levantine Turk quite differently. He rose, a short squat figure, from his seat on the steps of the well.

"Sixty philips will I pay for the joy of taming that wild cat," said he.

But Ibrahim was not to be outbidden. He offered seventy, the Turk countered with a bid of eighty, and Ibrahim again raised the price to ninety, and there fell a pause.

The dalal spurred on the Turk.

"Wilt thou be beaten then, and by an Israelite? Shall this lovely maid be given to a perverter of the Scriptures, to an inheritor of the fire, to one of a race that would not bestow on their fellow-men so much as the speck out of a date-stone? It were a shame upon a True-Believer."

Urged thus the Turk offered another five philips, but with obvious reluctance. The Jew, however, entirely unabashed by a tirade against him, the like of which he heard a score of times a day in the course of trading, pulled forth a heavy purse from his girdle.

"Here are on hundred philips," he announced. "'Tis overmuch. But I offer it."

Ere the dalal's pious and seductive tongue could urge him further the Turk sat down again with a gesture of finality.

"I give him joy of her," said he.

"She is thine, then, O Ibrahim, for one hundred philips."

The Israelite relinquished the purse to the dalal's white-robed assistants and advanced to receive the girl. The corsairs thrust her forward against him, still vainly battling, and his arms clossed about her for a moment.

"Thou hast cost me dear, thou daughter of Spain," said he. "But I am content. Come."

And he made shift to lead her away. Suddenly, however, fierce as a tiger-cat she writhed her arms upwards and clawed at his face. With a scream of pain he relaxed his hold of her, and in that moment, quick as lightning she plucked the dagger that hung from his girdle so temptingly within her reach.

"Valga me Dios!" she cried, and ere a hand could be raised to prevent her she had buried the blade in her lovely breast and sank in a laughing, coughing heap at his feet.

A final convulsive heave and she lay there quite still, whilst Ibrahim glared down at her with eyes of dismay, and over all the market there hung a hush of sudden awe.

Rosamund had risen in her place, and a faint color came to warm her pallor, a faint light kindled in her eyes. God had shown her the way through this poor Spanish girl, and assuredly God would give her the means to take it when her own turn came.

"How?" he choked. "Am I to lose a hundred philips?"

"What is written is written," replied the serene dalal.

Ibrahim was frothing at the lips, his eyes were blood-injected.

"But it was never written that—"

"Peace," said the dalal. "Had it not been written it could not have come to pass. It is the will of Allah! Who dares rebel against it?"

The crowd began to murmur.

"I want my hundred philips," the Jew insisted, whereupon the murmur swelled into a sudden roar.

"Thou hearest?" said the dalal. "Allah pardon thee, thou art disturbing the peace of this market. Away, ere ill betide thee."

"Hence! Hence!" roared the crowd, and some advanced threateningly upon the luckless Ibrahim. "Away, thou perverter of Holy Writ! Thou filth! Thou dog! Away!"

Such was the uproar, such the menace of angry countenances and clenched fists shaken in his very face, that Ibrahim quailed and forgot his loss in fear.

"I go, I go," he said, and turned hastily to depart.

But the dalal summoned him back.

"Take hence thy property," said he, and pointed to the body.

And so Ibrahim was forced to suffer the further mockery of summoning his slaves to bear away the lifeless body for which he had paid in lively potent gold.

The dalal turned to the portly Ayoub, who was plucking at his sleeve.

He bent his head to catch the muttered words of Fenzileh's wazeer. Then, in obedience to them, he ordered Rosamund to be brought forward.

She offered no least resistance, advancing in a singularly lifeless way, like a sleep-walker or one who had been drugged. In the heat and glare of the open market she stood by the dalal's side at the head of the well, whilst he dilated upon her physical merits in that lingua franca which he used since it was current coing among all the assorted races represented there—a language which the knowledge of French that her residence in France had taught her she was to her increasing horror and shame able to understand.

The first to make an offer for her was that same portly Moor who had sought to purchase the two Nubians. He rose to scrutinize her closely, and must have been satisfied, for the price he offered was a good one, and he offered it with contemptuous assurance that he would not be outbidden.

"One hundred philips for the milk faced girl."

"'Tis not enough. Consider me the moon-bright loveliness of her face," said the dalal as he moved on. "Chigil yields us fair women, but no woman of Chigil was ever half so fair."

"One hundred and fifty," said the Levantine Turk with a snap.

"Not yet enough. Behold the stately height which Allah hath vouchsafed her. See the noble carriage of her head, the luster of her eye! By Allah, she is worthy to grace the Sultan's own harem."

"She offered no least resistance, advancing in a singularly lifeless way, like a sleep-walker."

At length Ibrahim roused himself from his momentary stupor. He stepped deliberately across the body, his face inflamed, and stood to beard the impassive dalal.

"She is dead!" he bleated. "I am defrauded. Give me back my gold!"

"Are we to give back the price of every slave that dies?" the dalal questioned him.

"But she was not yet delivered to me," raved the Jew. "My hands had not touched her. Give me back my gold."

"Thou liest, son of a dog," was the answer, dispassionately delivered. "She was thine already. I had so pronounced her. Bear her hence, since she belongs to thee."

The Jew, his face empurpling, seemed to fight for breath.

He said no more than the buyers recognized to be true, and excitement stirred faintly through their usually impassive ranks. A Tagareen Moor named Yusuf offered at once two hundred.

But still the dalal continued to sing her praises. He held up one of her arms for inspection, and she submitted with lowered eyes, and no sign of resentment beyond the slow flush that spread across her face and vanished again.

"Behold me these limbs, smooth as Arabian silks and whiter than ivory. Look at those lips like pomegranate blossoms. The price is now two hundred philips. What wilt thou give, O Hamet?"

Hamlet showed himself angry that his original bid should so spedily have been doubled.

"By the Koran, I have purchased three sturdy girls from the Sus for less."

"Wouldst thou compare a squat-faced girl from the Sus with this narcissus-eyed glory of womanhood?" scoffed the dalal.

"Two hundred and ten, then," was Hamlet's sulky grunt.

HUMIDIFYING THE AIR

Humidifying and deodorizing the air in a home, theatre hotel lobby and similar places may be efficiently accomplished by the use of an appliance which operates as a miniature fountain. It resembles the now rather commonly seen electric founttains except that instead of a score of water jets it throws fifty fine sprays of perfumed water into the air. The height of these sprays is regular by a small centrifugal pump driven by a one-thirtieth-horsepower motor which in turn is controlled by a rheostat. The entire outfit weighs only 15 pounds.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

A Weekly Letter from London. (From a Special Correspondent).

London, October 2, 1924.

Faced as we are by an almost certain general election there is little confidence in a revival in trade during the autumn. There seems even more rocks ahead, for once we have decided by election the rights and wrongs of the withdrawal of teh prosecution for sedition in the case of Campbell, editor of the "Workers' Weekly, of the Ulster boundary, and of the Russian treaty, the vexed question of Mosul and indeed of the occupation of Mesopotamia remains to be solved. The Dawes report, even, which seemed at first sight to solve a very difficult problem is arousing great opposition among the miners; their deputation waited on the Prime Minister two days ago asking for the withdrawal of Reparations from Germany in the form of coal supplies. Even the government cannot disguise the fact that in the words of Frank Hodges, the civil Lord of the Admiralty," the lot of the British coal miner grows steadily worse." The figures for unemployment in the mining districts are growing and the Dawes Report can only add a new evil to those which the industry has already to bear. In one case last week 2000 men were served with notice at Dowlais in S. Wales, where the directors are unable to keep the mines open owing to crippling losses; it was explained that £100,000 was lost on two new drifts and it was further hinted that unless economic conditions become better more of the local pits will be closed. At present about 97,000 miners are unemployed. The Dawes Report has not in so many words increased the volume of Reparations coal to be delivered by Germany to France, Belgium and Italy, but it has ensured the prompt delivery of the original quantities, so that British coal cannot now get into these countries at a high enough price for British Collieries to live. The miners of France and Belgium are almost as badly hit as ours. The evil is dual in character since to ensure regular and ordered Reparations, the German working classes have been forced to take the longest hours and lowest pay of any European people. Soon there will be a capitalist offensive to forc edown wages and lengthen hours in other parts of Europe in order to compete; the Trade Union movement will then be formed to fight for survival and the only immediate remedy is agreement among the trade unions of Europe and the appointment of expert committees to consider the effects of the London agreement upon the conditions of the working classes in Europe. The only permanent remedy, however, seems to lie in a general cancelling of war debts and a fresh start with a clean sheet: the initiation of any such measures however, lies with America and of the three candidates for the presidency only Mr. Davies seems to incline at all in this direction and his remedies for the present state of things do not extent beyond a wish to bring America into the league, and by bringing down the protective tariffs to bring the United States a little out of their seclusion.

BELGIUM IN A WORSE PLIGHT.

Very similar reports come from Belgium; there is no prospect of resumption of work in the large Borinage coal fields, where the dispute has become more acute. The market is lifeless and coal masterrs are finding the position very difficult. On the iron and steel market the position continues most unfavourable to producers and the volume of export business has continued to decline. Competition is very keen and owing to high working costs, the Belgian producers are placed in a position of inferiority as compared with Germany. The production of iron is still on a much reduced scale; the output is, nevertheless, difficult to dispose of. The loss of foreign markets, secured by the Germans, is a severe blow to the Belgian trade as in the past months a very good business was done, especially with Great Britain, but it hoped that the industry will see its way to recover this ground with the establishment of suitable trading conditions.

PROSPECTS IN OTHER INDUSTRIES

The cotton mill operatives have agreed to continue a 26 hour week for the present owing to the poor state of th cotton industry, but there is a more hopeful outlook in some quarters for the iron and steel industries. A tendency to purchase shares in the shipbuilding industry points to a revival in that direction. At the moment, however, the production statistics are not such as to cause any great satisfaction. The total output of pig iron was 611,800 tons in July and 588,900 tons in August as compared with 599,888 tons in August, 1923. The number of furnaces in blast at the end of last month was 176, a decrease of two since the beginning of the month and of no less than 13 since the end of June. The latest figure is the lowest since December, 1922; there is however, hope of a revival. Feeling in Scotland is not so optimistic and there is little hope of any notable change before the end of the year, although in some quarters an optimistic view is taken of the outlook. Tools are not good sellers at the moment, and some traders are buying nothing for this branch of their business. The outlook in Birmingham and the Midlands is better. The home demands are slightly increasing, although they are depending at present on overseas business, chiefly with the Colonies. The cessation in the building trade has lately been a great hindrance, but new housing schemes will promote trade in builders' hardware. The small tool trade is still patchy but there are encouraging signs in the Indian and S. America markets. Trade with the Dominions, especally Australia, is good: there is a tendency among large manufacturing firms in the Midlands to provide subsidiary depots and workin the countries in which they do a good deal of business and one big company is completing its equipment of works in Canada. On the whole the outlook is hopeful.

HOPE FOR AN EMIGRATION POLICY

The president of the Canadian National Railways, Sir Henry Thornton, recently stated that a tour of the railways of Western and Central Canada had convinced him that immigration is necessary to forward the solution of the problems of the Dominions. He asserted that an aggressive immigration policy, would do more to bring immigrants to Canadian shores than anything that is being down at present. Canada might well become an alternative destination to the United States for emigrants from Britain, in view of the very restrictive policy of the latter country. Sir Henry Thornton does not appear to have stated whether any preference should be given to immigrants of British nationality, but no steps have been taken by the Canadian Government in this regard so far. In connection with British emigration to the Colonies, plans are on foot for the establishment of an organisation in London for the purpose of furthering the settlement in the Colonies of English people with small fixed incomes. The idea is to inaugurate "garden settlements" and to impress upon the right type of settlers the advantages offered. This movement is somewhat outside the general problem of emigration and, in view of the type of settler to which it is designed to appeal, its results will probably be greater a generation ahead than in the immediate future. It is however, an encouraging sign, as is the Canadian scheme for settlement on farms that was referred to in this column in the letter of August 21st.

HOME FOR HOMELESS SHELTERS PRINCE REARED IN PALACES

BUDAPEST, Oct. 3.—Among the dwellers in an old military barrack turned over to the homeless in this city, is Prince Abdul-Kadir, a son of the late Abdul Hamid, deposed sultan of Turkey.

The prince is about 46 years old. He accupies four rooms with his wife, two sons, his mother in law and his secretary. His former numerous retinue now has shrunk to a negro servant, a maid and a cook.

Abdul-Kadir is pressing his suit against the Turkish government for the recovery of his share of the Abdul Hamid wealth, which was sequestrated by the young Turks when the sultan was deposed.

The favorite amusement of Abdul Hamid's son is playing the violin, at which he has been practicing since he was six years old. Those who have heard him perform assert that he plays well.

In his younger days Abdul-Kadir obtained a diploma as a mechanical engineer. He is trying to obtain employment in his profession with a Budapest manufacturer.
