"Earlie, why didn't you cut the grass, as I told you to?"
"I was going to, father, but the truant officers are around looking for boys under 16 who are cutting and I was afraid of getting into trouble."

"Then I may ask your father for your hand?"
"No, you silly thing! Tell him Don't ask him!"

The Wife-Ship Woman

By Hugh Pendexter

Copyright by Hugh Pendexter 1929-1930

A flight of arrows hissed over my head and one or two stuck in the side of my canoe. I snatched my pistols up from the bottom of the canoe and emptied them, and then braced myself to use the musket as a club. Nash had two pistols and Six Fingers let off a musket, and the canoe was driven toward me—channel and downstream.

"Naked men in the water attacked us, monsieur," explained Narbonne as our canoes drifted together. "I got one and the old rat dived another. How is mademoiselle?"

"Dieu merci! I think I shall live, but I was dying of the fright," she whispered. "Red hands at my throat! Can I ever forget when they would drag me into the river!"

"But they did not, mademoiselle," I sharply reminded her. "A danger passed as I thought it never happened. Be calm. They have all gone. There is no more danger."

Narbonne asked what I proposed doing.

"Mademoiselle is nervous. We will land and wait until she recovers her composure," I said.

Her fingers closed on my arm, and she whispered:

"After all it was only death that stalked me. Death is clean. It was us coming while I slept that unnerved me. Monsieur, you prefer to make a certain distance before daylight. Proceed. Do not consider me. I am myself now. It is nothing."

After reloading my musket and pistols and seeing that Six Fingers did the same, I again took the lead.

This time there was no need to caution my companions as to the value of silence. Nor did we again pass the Indian's canoe although we kept to the river until well into the gray morning.

CHAPTER IX
 The Fight at the Bayou.

We camped and rested, and the remainder of the journey to the big loop was finished late in the afternoon with nothing occurring to disturb mademoiselle.

The river talked to me. It taunted me with threats of ambushes along the silent, broadening shore. It whispered of Dampson the Fox cunningly awaiting us at the big loop. The influence of the mighty waters rather worked on my nerves, and when, an unusually large area of drift first appeared around the next bend I had to re-consider it from a tree. I was suddenly taken with the notion that we had been seen and that Dampson's canoes were waiting upon us under cover of the swampy marsh.

I hurriedly explained my purpose to Narbonne and the girl and had them

EAGLE BRAND MILK

NURSE your child, of course, if possible, but don't experiment with all sorts of food that you know little about.

Eagle Brand has been the standard infant food since 1857. It is entirely pure, it is exceedingly digestible and there is an ever ready supply at any dealer's no matter where you live or where you go.

Drift hiding me from the river that I directed Narbonne slowly to paddle my canoe and the girl along the bayou with Six Fingers bringing up the other while I tried my luck hunting. Pointing out a dead tree far ahead, I told Narbonne to halt there and build a small fire, taking care to shield it with blankets.

"We'll camp long enough to rest and eat and then push on," I told them. "It will save a full day's paddling and a possible encounter with Dampson and his Chocwags." Then taking the bow and arrows, and my ax, I scouted toward the main river in the hope of finding some waterfowl.

But move as silently as I would I could find no birds. When I was about opposite the dead tree I decided it was growing too dark for hunting and began making for the camp. As I turned my back a rustling in the underbrush behind me revived my hopes and I glided behind a clump of bushes and slipped an arrow from the quiver. The ground was clear of growth for a few rods, and as the sound was repeated I fully expected to see a rabbit enter the opening.

With the silent, of a shadow a Chocwag warrior emerged from the growth and stood as if listening. Then he dropped on his knees and began examining the ground, realizing that he had found my tracks and would know at the first glance that a white man had been there. My next thought was the necessity of preventing the fellow from reporting his discovery. As he leaped erect I released the arrow. His yell of discovery was a second ahead of the dead shaft and although he went down with the arrow sticking through his neck he had done what I intended to prevent.

That his companions were close at hand was proved by the almost immediate response to his wild cry; then there came the sound of men crashing recklessly through the growth. Next they were pouring from cover in single file until I counted an even dozen, and there were more behind among the bushes. The first warrior in the opening came to the dead warrior and dropped beside him and examined the arrow. Another was casting about for a trail.
