THE PREACHER'S FRUIT

(By Peter McArthur) Once upon a time—you see I know how to begin a story in the right way—a barefoot boy danced by the roadside and shouted gleefully. It was in Canada, back in the nineteenth century, in the pioneer days. The little boy was healthy and frolicked, and when he tired in clothes he made up in the kind of body one would have inside of clothes. And he was very, very happy. In fact he was so happy that a passing friend stopped to ask him the cause of it all. "Hurrah!" shouted he of the freckles. "Why so happy?" asked the friend. "The preacher is coming to dinner!" "I didn't think you were so fond of him." "I ain't, but whenever the preacher comes to dinner we always have peach preserves. It really is not much of a story and I am giving it on account of its arch, e-ological interest and not because it is so very funny. It dates back to the days when people merely knew that peaches are the best of fruits and had not discovered their virtues as yet. The best place to raise the very best of them. The woman who was fortunate enough to get some from a sheltered orchard or from a lone tree that was so fortunately situated that it escaped the frost put up a few to have for such special occasions as these days the minister was a much more welcome visitor on the farm than the agent of get-rich-quick concerns and mining promoters and there is a moral to that if I only had time to work it out. Because peaches were raised for such special occasions, a tradition has grown up about them in many parts of the country. Some housewives, otherwise very bright, and a credit to the Farmer's Institutes to which they belong, consider it an extravagance to preserve peaches unless they get them at special prices. The same women will pay from ten to fifteen cents a quart for currants and berries that need far more sugar to do them up than the already sweet peaches. As peaches usually come in eleven-quart baskets you will find it your best bet to buy peaches at other times when the price is less than any other fruit. But because they were once so great a luxury housewives are slow to realize that they should have more of them than of any kind of fruit, for they are both the cheapest and the most nutritious. In the districts where peaches cannot be grown should not buy them as freely as they do other fruits and have them not only when the preacher comes to dinner but when the boys and girls come home from the city and at other times when they want to have something luxurious on the table. Also it should be remembered that for eating from the hand the peach is the best fruit of all, but you should use for this purpose only the peaches that you buy in the full light of day. Once upon a time, or perhaps it should say "Once upon another time," a newly arrived Irishman went out with a friend to steal peaches. It was dark and Pat had been told to grope along the branches for the fruit. Presently he whispered, "Molke!" His friend replied, "Phrat!" "Has molke got legs?" "Naw." "Then begobs I've swallowed a straddle bug."

A NEIGHBOURHOOD CLUB

Getting away from home for an afternoon and brushing against different personalities is wonderfully restful and refreshing. The way this was accomplished by a rather jaded housewife is simple. She wanted a neighborhood club, but not one with a lot of rules, regulations, and red tape, so she just sent a postcard to each of her women neighbors, asking them to meet at her home on the following Tuesday, from two o'clock till five. They all responded, and at four o'clock she served coffee and sandwiches, which took off some of the little rigid feeling that sometimes accompanies a first gathering. They began the meeting by talking over the proposed club and what they should make its object. Some one asked to invite the same set of people for the following Tuesday, and each one was wanted to be ready to respond to the roll call with a poem, a recipe, a reading from a newspaper cutting, or a souvenir postcard to be passed round later and discussed. A president and secretary were elected, and a list of names submitted, by one of which was wanted to be known. Just to give a more definite feeling, the originator of the club and her fellow-members soon found that they did as much work at home on club days as they did on other days. The little outing was a stimulus before and sent them home refreshed and heartened. As one of the women said: "If I run from one task to another with no pleasure in sight, I get into nagging, fault-finding habits."
