HEARTS AFIRE

By MARY CHRISTIE

CHAPTER 71 THE VERDICT

Prudence Page had not been far from Pear-Tree Cottage when the accident occurred. The noise of the explosion startled her, filling her with dreadful premonition. "Peter! Peter! Are you here?" No answer.

She pushed and thrust, in vain. Then, heedless of torn frock and a cut on her foot, she scrambled through a broken window, calling: "Peter! Peter! Are you here?" No answer.

She dropped from the window to the stone floor within, and gave a cry as she saw, amid the wreckage, Peter, lying, crumpled, face downward, one arm thrown forward, as though, amid disaster, he had tried to save himself.

"Peter!" Prudence rushed to him, and—kneeling down—she put her arms about his shoulders. "Peter! Speak to me! O Peter!" Ghastly silence.

"Peter!" The agonized cry rang through the wrecked shed. Something warm and wet dripped on her head, red-colored. . . . It was blood!

"Peter dearest!" With a mighty effort she contrived to ease his head around, so that it fell against his shoulder. "Peter, wake up!"

Except for the deathly whiteness of his face, he looked as though he were asleep. The eyes were closed, the body limp.

Prudence thrust her hand inside his torn coat, against his heart. Was it still beating? Was he . . . was he . . . dead?

"Peter!" Glass lay on the floor, and everywhere. Again that warm trickle fell on Prudence's frock. There was a gash high above the ear, and the girl, without a moment's hesitation, tore a founce of her gown off, and made a rough bandage for that bleeding head.

"Hi there! What's happened?" The village constable rapped loudly on the door. "Open it say!" "Door's stuck. Come in by the window," Prudence called. "But first run for a doctor!"

The head of the village constable, accompanied by some neighbors appeared at the wrecked windows. "An explosion," said Prudence quickly. "I'm afraid he's badly hurt."

"One of the neighbors, who had a pony-trap outside, hurried for the doctor, while the others forced the door, and the big constable with the help of another man, carried the unconscious Armstrong into the bedroom on the ground floor of Pear-Tree Cottage.

"Someone ran for stimulant, and old Nannie, wringing her hands, kept wailing:— "He is dead."

To Prudence, the whole thing seemed a terrible nightmare. It was only when Janet Mercer, cool and composed, arrived upon the scene, that she went home.

The doctor's diagnosis had been very guarded. Until he'd got a second opinion, one couldn't say the extent of the injuries. There were complications! An operation might be necessary.

Yes, it was serious. Extremely so. One couldn't say yet what the chances were. . . . There were some bad signs. Heart action very feeble. Shock.

Oh, yes, danger of collapse, as always in these cases. The other doctor had been telephoned for, from the local post office. He was on his way, by car. They would telegraph to town for an eminent surgeon, if 'second opinion' advised it.

Prudence, her head full of the doctor's disjointed, gruff talk, walked with leaden feet towards her home. The news had spread, and her mother was at the garden gate, looking very anxious.

"Poor Mr. Armstrong!" "He's still living," gulped Prudence, speaking as though she were in a sort of trance. "Janet Mercer is undertaking the case, and they've telegraphed for a night nurse, too. Mr. Cumbermere was passing in his racing-car . . . he knows Peter . . . and he says he'll get the best that's to be had, doctors, surgeons, nurses and all. Everything is being done."

At half past nine that night, when the night-nurse went on duty, Janet Mercer came to Green Gables for a breath of air. "He's been partly conscious, partly delirious, but there's hope," she said to trembling Prudence. "The she added, anxiously:— "The worst trouble's with his eyes."

"What!" "Yes. The explosion was a very bad one."

"Can—can he see?" asked Prudence, thunder-struck. "We don't know yet. The doctor has them bandaged."

Next day, and the following, there was no further news. An eminent consultant from New York had said that much depended on the nursing, and in his turn, had brought a famous oculist to Pear-Tree Cottage.

It seemed an interminable, heart-breaking time till he comes out again. And he was looking very grave as he drove off.

Prudence's trembling limbs would scarcely carry her to the door. "Oh, Janet, won't you tell me what the oculist said? The eyes will get better won't they? Don't tell me that—Peter . . . I can't say the awful word . . . it would kill him . . ."

Down Janet Mercer's homely face the tears were coursing. She took Prudence's hand in her own strong capable one, gave it a pressure, then said brokenly:— "Be brave my dear! He'll need all the bravery we can give him! What the oculist took off the bandages— "Yes? Yes? Peter could see . . ."

breathed Prudence, clinging to Janet's hand. "Peter will never see again. He . . . blind!" said Janet brokenly (To be Continued.)

EGYPT'S AWAKENING

In the great station square of Cairo there stands a new sculpture placed there by the Egyptian Parliament. It shows the figure of a sphinx, not recumbent, as are the sphinxes of ancient Egypt, but rising on its forefeet, stretching itself. Close by, with her hand upon its head, shrouded as always in black, stands a woman with head upraised and veil thrown back, looking above and beyond. The name of that sculptured group is "Egypt Awakening."

As you stand with me before it your hearts, too, will go out in prayer to God that, as she awakens Egypt may reach the highest and best.

I love to think of the work of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union as responding to the call of the prophet Isaiah (62: 10) —"Prepare ye the way of the people: cast up; cast up the highway; gather out the stones: lift up an ensign for the peoples," and

After the war a merchant introduced cocaine, and its use quickly spread to all classes. Now heroin, that worst of all drugs, has largely taken its place.

I wish to pay a tribute to the work of Russell Pasha, an Englishman in Cairo, and now also in charge of the new government bureau for combating drugs. His fearless energy in tracing drug rings to their haunts and in inducing nations to prevent manufacture and export by reform of their laws is making the whole world a little better.

Best Remedy for Cough Is Easily Mixed at Home

NoCooking! NoWork! Real Saving! You'll never know how quickly a stubborn cough can be conquered, until you try this famous recipe. It is used in more homes than any other cough remedy, because it gives more prompt, positive relief. It's no trouble at all to mix and costs but a trifle.

Into a 16 oz. bottle, pour 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex; then add granulated sugar syrup to make 16 ounces. Syrup is easily made with 2 cups of sugar and one cup of water, stirred a few moments until dissolved. No cooking needed. This gives you four times as much cough medicine for your money, and it's a purer, better remedy. It never spoils, and tastes fine.

Instantly you feel its penetrating effect. It loosens the germ-laden phlegm, clears the air passages, and soothes and heals the inflamed membranes. This three-fold action explains why it brings such quick relief in severe coughs.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway Pine, used for generations for its healing effect on throat membranes. It is guaranteed to give prompt relief or your money refunded.

Why stay RUN-DOWN?

Fruit-a-tives give new life. The only thing that makes me miserable now is the thought that for years I struggled along in a run-down condition, when, if I had known about Fruit-a-tives I would have been freed from my misery long ago. I was contipated, bilious and suffered greatly from severe headaches. Fruit-a-tives freed me up generally. They really have done me the world of good.

THE TOBACCO HABIT Dealing with this habit from a

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. JOHN D. MacPHEE There passed peacefully away,

October 14th, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John M. Acorn, Mt. Vernon, Isabella Gillis, widow of the late John D. MacPhee, at the advanced age of 81 years.

Although the deceased had not enjoyed robust health for some time, and was confined to her bed for the past ten months, her passing was wholly unexpected, and came as a great shock to her family.

She leaves to mourn five daughters: Mrs. John M. Acorn, Mt. Vernon; Mrs. Levi Morow, Iris; Mrs. George Spencer, Manchester, N.H.; Mrs. Joseph Mason and Mrs. Florence MacDonald, Lowell, Mass. and one son Daniel A., in Lowell, Mass. also eighteen grandchildren and eight great grandchildren.

Her husband predeceased her 31 years ago. The funeral services at the house and at the grave were conducted by Rev. A. Murray, Caledonia. Interment was in Wood Island Cemetery.—(Patriot please copy).

purely physical standpoint and that is the least serious one, D. H. Kress, M. D., Neurologist, Washington Sanitarium and Hospital, writing on "Tobacco Industry Destructive to our National Life," out of a wonderful practical experience on the subject affirms:

"Nervous and mental diseases have tremendously increased with the increase in the use of cigarettes. Much of this can be attributed to the prevalent use of cigarettes. So common are mental diseases at the present time that every other bed in the hospitals of America is now being occupied by a mental case. Aside from this there are a great many suffering from nervous diseases that may be termed border-line cases."

In a recent report Russell Pasha wrote: "Police work alone is not sufficient. Public opinion must be aroused. There is scarcely a family in Egypt that has not among its members or friends someone who has lost all through drugs." Then follows a sentence that might well become a slogan for this convention. "This family grief and family shame must be welded into a national determination to cure the country of this evil."

We of Egypt wish to thank the Australian Woman's Christian Temperance Union for her gifts to us. By them millions of pages of literature and thousands of posters have been sent on their mission of warning and teaching, "lifting up an ensign for the peoples."

Two beautiful queens of the East come to mind as we close. Vashiti left her throne and was lost to the raw opium, but in May, 1926, a law forbade further cultivation. The miles of the lovely flowers of the opium poppy that had curved the Nile Valley disappeared. I have not seen one since that time.
