There's Nothing Orthodox About This Old Trader

HUGO, Oklahoma, May 13 — (AP) — The sign on the outside of the store reads: "Everything to Sell from a Chigger to an Elephant"

On the inside is 60-year-old Smith Lipscombe Luton, one of the best horse traders in the old Choctaw nation, which is now southeastern Oklahoma.

Luton's "Indian Territory Trading Post" is known for its assortment of odd and ends to end all odds and ends.

If you dusted off a random stack of articles, you would find a collar, button, coffin, horsecollar, wooden lemon squeezer and embossed powder horn.

There are hundreds of such items piled in the store, but Luton finds there always is a buyer, no matter how useless an article may appear. Although his store is far from the nation's crossroads, there is a well beaten path to his door.

Luton doesn't want publicity. Another crude, homemade sign in his store reads: "I have made a living when Hugo was in the Indian territory. I didn't worry then whether you bought or not. In fact, you wasn't here. I got along O.K. and am still doing it."

It's getting so people dare Luton to buy things from them because of his reputation to turn everything into a profit. A well-dressed stranger once appeared at the trading post and declared: "I have something here you won't buy."

Luton took a look. Without even a grimace he plunked down 15 cents and bought a glass eye. It didn't gather dust long. Luton found a customer and sold it for $1.55.

Good Quilt Boxes

He once purchased some old-fashioned caskets from an out of state company. Folks here thought he would get stuck for sure that time. But not old Luton. He sold them around the country as "nice for quilt boxes."

"It's nothing unusual for him to resell used false teeth. Only recently he received a letter from a Bartlesville, Okla., woman. She wrote: "I got me a set of dentures, which I have never had in my mouth. The teeth are pretty in the set, and I thought I'd write to see if you would buy them and what price you will pay."

Luton ignores all orthodox selling methods and practices. Everything is piled high in his one-story brick building. One sign reads: "Warning — don't get the dust off my merchandise. That's the reason it's cheap. Rub it off and I'll have to go up 50 per cent."

He tells the world his philosophy in another sign: "Stop. Get acquainted with people. I run my business and don't let it run me. I don't mind getting down to work in the morning because it's play!"

And then there's this one: "After all is said and done, what difference does it make if you are a king or a horse trader, as long as you are right?"
