STRATHCONA INSTITUTE

On Thursday evening the Strathcona Institute and a large number of guests gathered at the Florida Hotel, Pownall, for its most successful annual banquet. The hotel is the largest and best adapted in the district for such gatherings, and with such a capable hostess as Mrs. Brown and her active waiters, supplemented by a large number of the fair young ladies of the district, everything was brought near to the ideal for the 100 who sat down to the well filled tables.

The epicure had his heaven in the heavily laden tables, which was intensified by the satisfaction at the outset by the well arranged tables and later by the consciousness of the good cooking.

Time falls, as does the space, to tell of all the nice things. Of course it was hard for those unable to get to the first, second or third tables to stand back, but with songs of highest class and games the time passed easily for those who were fortunate to be at the first tables and helped the unfortunate to bear up against the pangs of hunger.

However, all were soon satisfied, and under the chairmanship of the president of the Institute, Mr. Ludlow Jenkins, a good programme was kept under way. Songs and speeches kept things lively till about 2 a.m.

The solo singers were Miss E. Smith and Mr. J. A. Moore, who were both in great spirit. Miss Smith also took charge of the organ for the evening. The speakers and speeches were all on a par with the occasion.

The chairman was genial but not long winded. The gathering would have enjoyed more of him. The Rev. E. S. Weeks, for the short time allotted to him, dealt in his usual spirited way with our dependency on the farmers.

Mr. West, of York Institute, followed and gave a most practical address on the advantages of the Institute movement. No one who heard Mr. West can wonder at the success of York Institute if it has many members like that genial speaker.

The last speaker of the evening was the Rev. W. B. McVie, who dealt with the Church and the Institute movement. Though having gone through the strain of so many speeches, the gathering was patient right to the last and marked its appreciation of speakers and singers by hearty votes of thanks.

A vote of thanks to Mr and Mrs Brown of the Florida was also unanimously given. Dispersing with the chords of God Save the King still ringing in the banquet ended with the wish that all would be so glad to enjoy another banquet of the same kind to be in many ways the best yet held.

PARIS STREETS EMPTY

Francis Joseph in rubber who when blown up, promptly breathed his last sigh. I could not count the rewards of demerits which the Kaiser receives. But far more numerous are the little soldiers, leaden, two inches high, with a railroad train, to a foot high in gay uniforms, with spick and span Red Cross nurses for dolls, and mechanical toys for the realities of war.

At the other end of the building scale, solid and frequent and perpetual, are the Government pawnshops. They are "my aunt" in Paris as they are "my uncle" in New York. And it is a Paris saying, "As my aunt is a Paris saying, 'Well, look in at the vault central office which occupies, in the heart of Old Paris, a much-enlarged ancient manoir of Blancs Manteaux—'White-Mantle'—monks who were Servites. These official, supervised cautious pawnshops also serve. From the beginning of war, the Government ruled that things already in pawn should not be sold, even though the pledge fell due and no money should be forthcoming to hang them up again 'on the nail'—which is another Paris expression.

This is a real comfort to many a poorly conditioned soldier who marched off, knowing that the little possessions on which he had raised money and not wish to lose would be safely kept for his family. But there is something more surprising—and edifying—as to the dispositions of the Paris people under stress of war.

For five months with all trouble and absence of bread-winners and stoppage of sources of income, more things have been taken out of pawn or new fees paid in for them than new objects have been pawned. French soldiers, and officers even, deprive themselves so as to send money to their wives to get back their little comfortable possessions and keep up the home during their enforced absence. Of course, this does not give so theatrical an impression of success in war, as would the sending home of loot from enemy's houses—but the Paris people are not looking for that.

I do not know if they are eating according to their hunger. If not, it is because they are striving to hold out as their defenders are holding out in the trenches. Vegetables and fruits and even meats are little, if any, dearer, than before the war. Only coal is dearer—because the enemy has the French mines, and English coal, though sufficient in quantity, is costly to handle.

A CHANT OF LOVE FOR ENGLAND.

This "Chant of Love" was, of course, suggested by Ernest Lisauer's "Chant of Hate" familiar through the spirited version of Mrs. Archibald Henderson.

A song of hate is a song of Hell; Some there be that sing it well. Let them sing it loud and long, We lift our hearts in a loftier song; We lift our hearts to Heaven above, Singing the glory of her we love—England!

Glory of thought and glory of deed, Glory of Hampden and Bunnymede; Glory of ships that sought for goals, Glory of swords and glory of soul! Glory of heroes mounting as birds, Glory immortal of magical words; Glory of Milton, glory of Nelson, Tragical glory of Gordon and Scott; Glory of Shelley, glory of Sidney, Glory of transcendent that perishes not. Hers is the story, hers be the glory—England!

Shatter her beautiful breast ye may; The spirit of England none can slay! Dash the bomb on the dome of St. Paul's, Deem ye the fame of the Admirals? Praise the stone from the chance! floor, Dream ye that Shakespeare shall live no more? Where is the giant shot that kills Wordsworth walking the old green hills? Trample the red rose on the ground—Keats is Beauty while earth spins round! Blind her, grind her, burn her with fire, Cast her ashes into the sea; She shall escape, she shall aspire, She shall arise to make men free; She shall arise in sacred scorn, Lighting the lives that are yet unborn; Spirit supernal, splendor eternal, England!

A SILENCER. It was in a railway carriage and the occupants were several travellers and a staid, pompous old gentleman. Various and unsuccessful efforts were made to draw him into conversation. At length one of them said, "Come sir, I know you are one of us. Tell us what you are travelling in."

"Young man," answered the tormented one, glaring at his interlocutor, "I am travelling in a very objectionable and inequitable company, and the carriage is full of samples."

DISPENSING OF PRESCRIPTIONS

at the "Central Drugstore"

Purity—Accuracy—Fair Prices

is the timber with which our Prescription Department is built. We do not claim to have the largest prescription business in the city, but by paying strict attention to this branch, allowing the work to be done by registered pharmacists, using only the purest drugs and giving just what is ordered by the doctor, we hope to keep increasing it day by day.

In the school of experience we have learned our lesson—you profit by this knowledge.

Keep this little talk in mind and allow us to do your dispensing. You will find there is a good deal in what we have said.

TWO SUBAMRINES, EIGHT DESTROYERS ADMITTED LOST BY GERMANY

SINKING OF THE CRUISER KOLBERG IN NORTH SEA FIGHT ACKNOWLEDGED IN NAVAL CIRCLES.

LONDON, Saturday, Feb. 10.—The Chronicle prints the following despatch from a correspondent near the German frontier:— I learn that besides the published German naval losses, there are eight destroyers and two submarines written off in the official lists. Two of the destroyers were lost in the Channel on September 4, three on the Dogger Bank, and another, S-190, in the Atlantic waters. One of the submarines sank off Westcote, and one near the Dogger Bank. Two of the others have been missing for over three weeks.

The armed auxiliary cruiser Kronprinzessin Cecilie has also been scratched off the official tables. The statement made by German bluejackets captured after the Heligoland naval battle of January 24, that the light cruiser Kolberg was confirmed, though not publicly admitted, in German naval circles.

The reports published early in December that the German battleship Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse and the armored cruiser Hertha had been lost in the Baltic are incorrect. The armored cruiser Friedrich Karl sank after striking a German mine in the Baltic on November 18. It was known that this vessel had gone to the bottom, but the manner of its loss had never been definitely announced.

FROM SALISBURY

The following letter has been received by Mrs. George W. Gardiner, Charlottetown, from her son George, who is now in France with the First Contingent: No. 2 Sec. D. S. C. 1st Bds. Hgtr., Jan. 22, 1915.

Dear Mother,—Your very welcome letter of the 6th arrived a couple of days ago and was very acceptable. We are kept pretty busy now as we are shooting on the range. The telephone to Lark Hill was replaced by telegraph a couple of days ago but we are still on the job. We are to be returned to the section to-morrow I think. The target practice is great. We shoot at a target half green and half sky-blue with the head and shoulders of a man painted on in khaki. The target comes up for 3 seconds and you have to get your shot off in that time. The rifles shoot fine and the magazine is perfect. It holds six cartridges. We have been down the last four days. Another way we shoot the target comes up for twenty seconds and we have to fire five shots in that time. I have done fairly good but there's room for improvement. We had about two inches of snow last night but it was gone by noon. At the ranges they rolled big snowballs to clear off the huts. We have fired at the 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 hundred ranges and expect to go to 150 yds. to-morrow to shoot at moving targets, dummys running across the range.

We are feeding high in the tent we're in now. We are with the men who work the line in Bustard. They are old-timers and get steaks and cook them up every day. Altogether we have a fine time with nothing to do and plenty to eat. London snaps were no good but a couple of Harry's turned out fine. One was Nelson's Monument on Trafalgar Square which we took from the portico of the National Art Gallery and the other the Victoria Memorial with Buckingham Palace in the background. I will send them along as soon as he gets some more down from London. You asked me if I was impressed with the size of London. Well I don't think I was. It seemed to me to be like a dozen towns all grown into one rather than an immense city as I imagine New York to be. There are very few large or high buildings there, they all seem to be just medium sized. On the other hand it certainly was impressive to get into a Tube train and travel for about 20 minutes at 35 miles an hour and get out to find yourself still in the centre of business.

The sera book from Prince Street School arrived a couple of days ago. It was very thoughtful of the girls to get it up and they certainly would be gratified to see the way we dig into it. Harry Whitlock got another small box from home to-day. It came by mail, that is certainly the only safe way to send parcels as the express is never delivered. The papers are still coming from Miss Pound and are very much enjoyed.

Yesterday the signallers went out with the brigade for manoeuvres. We got about half a mile up the road when the cone on my hand wheel caught with the sprocket and turned up so tight that I couldn't hammer it loose. I turned into a field and removed the hind wheel to try to fix it. After hammering for about twenty minutes I decided that it was impossible, so I leaned the wheel against the barn and beat it for home, with my kit and rifle. Then I headed for the bike. I worked
